That resolution was unanimously adopted by the Senate, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs addressed to the Secretary of the Interior a communication accompanied by a tabular statement showing the number of Indians each successive year from 1832 down to and including 1875, together with the expense annually of providing for those Indians. It is true, he states, that there is nothing in his Office which makes this an absolutely certain statement, but that it approximates, and he places it in the possession of the Senate for what it may be worth. At all events this paper is such a one as ought to contain the truth, and, I presume, does contain as near the truth as can be furnished by that Bureau.

The figures furnished by the Commissioner in response to the resolution are as follows:

Year.	Population.	Expenditures.	Year.	Population.	Expenditures.

*For the half year, from January 1, 1843, to June, 30, 1843. The statement of expenditures is by calendar years to 1843, and by fiscal years from that time.

From the population as given in this table the number of Cherokees, Choctaws, and Chickasaws, and Six Nations of New York has been uniformly excluded.

These figures show that the expenses of the Indian Bureau have increased from $1,374,161.55, the expenditure in 1849 when the transfer was made from the War Department to the Interior Department, to the enormous sum in 1875, under the peace policy, of $8,384,656.82. Under the present policy, it is necessary for the Government to have a separate Commissary Department for the feeding and providing of the Indians, and a separate Quartermaster's Department, if you please to call it by that name, for that is what it is, for furnishing clothing, blankets, &c., to the Indians. Clothing and subsistence have to be furnished through this Indian Bureau for the Indians. Clothing and subsistence for the Army have to be furnished by the Quartermaster's and Commissary Departments of the Army, and this clothing and this subsistence go to precisely the same posts where the Indian Bureau sends its clothing and subsistence for the Indians. We have two separate and distinct systems, whereas every business man knows that under one system the expense could be very largely reduced. That is the testimony of every officer of the United States Army who has spoken upon that question.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me at that point to make one suggestion, if it does not annoy him?

Mr. MAXEY. With pleasure. It is no annoyance.

Mr. LOGAN. We all want to get at the facts, of course. I have looked very thoroughly into this question. In speaking about the cost of the Indian Bureau the Senator finds the millions of dollars that he is speaking about. If he will only examine the case a little further, he will find that the majority of this expense is simply to pay annuities to the Indians for property, their lands, &c., which we purchased from them since they were under the control of the War Department. There is only a little over $2,000,000 of that expense, if the Senator will examine it; that is really in fact the expense of the Indian Department. The Senator will see further, when he cuts off the annuities under the treaties that have to be paid and takes the year 1838, (I think it was 1838; it was somewhere between 1830 and 1840,) it is more than the expense of the Indian Bureau has ever been from that day to this. That of course is when you take out the amount of money that is paid them under treaty for lands purchased of them.

Mr. MAXEY. I think I know perfectly well all about that transaction. It was in the years 1836, 1837, and 1838 that the Cherokees, Choctaws, and Chickasaws were removed from east of the Mississippi River to their present home, west of Arkansas and north of Texas. The United States by treaty had acquired the magnificent country which these Indians owned in the State of Georgia, the State of Mississippi, and a portion of the States of Tennessee and Alabama, and had ceded to them the country they now occupy, and it was during those years that the Indians were removed from that country to where they now are at an enormous expense, fully shown by the figures for those years in the tabular statement already read. Whole tribes of them were removed at an enormous expense and transferred to the country west of Arkansas and north of the Red River, and but a few miles from where I live. It was on that account that those expenses during those three years, 1836, 1837, and 1838, ran up to the increase which I read to the Senate. After this was accomplished, it dropped down, as I have shown, in 1849 to $1,374,161.55. The figures show the correctness of the statement which I make.

In support of the position which I have taken in regard to this dual system of supporting under one system of commissary and quartermasters the Army and under another system the Indians at the same post, I will read the testimony of General Mackenzie, one of the best officers in the United States Army, and a man whose testimony upon an Indian question is as good as that of any man in the Army. I happen to know something about General Mackenzie. While on the Rio Grande he was a terror to Mexican cattle-thieves, and in quick pursuit drove them across the river, as he ought to have done, and this or a like policy is essential on that frontier. There is not a man in the Army whose testimony can be more relied upon. I will refer to what he says on this very point. I read from a document furnished to the Forty-fourth Congress, first session, report of committee No. 354, made in the House of Representatives on the 9th of March, 1876, and ordered to be printed. It is an official document, and I read from the statement of General Mackenzie:

Should the Government propose to conduct its Indian affairs without reference to political party, its transfer to the War Department would be very advantageous to the Indians, and no particular disadvantage to the Army. If the question of party politics is to be kept in view in its management, with which the affairs of Indians have no rational connection, its transfer will be a very great disadvantage to the Army, and of no special benefit to anybody else.

As a sensible matter of government, this transfer is an apparent necessity. The dual system, as applied to the tribes which need the continual presence of troops, is probably as great an absurdity as has ever been conceived; while the affairs of the tribes which are uncivilized can just as readily be administered by the War Department, and indeed there are certain advantages which, from having an established system of supply, are enjoyed by the War Department, and which have with difficulty to be duplicated by the Interior Department. To explain what I mean: It is necessary to purchase flour for the use of troops; it is just about as easy to purchase a much larger amount and include the Indian supply. To purchase for the Army the War Department is obliged to keep in the large markets officers selected for that very purpose, and the Indian supplies may as well be procured by them.

I am now talking dollars and cents as a matter of common sense and common economy. I see, as every other man must see who knows anything about this thing of supplies, that where you are compelled to keep a set of officers for the very purpose of purchasing supplies they can purchase one thousand barrels of flour, for an instance, on better terms than they can purchase one hundred, because of the larger bulk, and there will be but one set of officers to pay. For that reason this dual system is, as was stated by General Mackenzie, an entire absurdity as a business transaction. He says further:

This, of course, applies to all tribes who receive anything whatever from the Government, peaceable or hostile, and is entirely independent of any question of the employment of the force needed to sustain authority.

The wilder tribes, to the government of which allusion has been made in a former part of this paper, and with whom the presence of troops is so thoroughly understood that the mere mention of the fact is considered necessary, can only rationally be ruled by the War Department. The troops must be near their agencies; they must be a visible power.

Now, it appears to be the desire of the best people of the United States that these Indians should be kindly, though resolutely, governed, and for that purpose the very best capacity which the Government can employ should be used.

The success of an officer from the day he enters the line of the Army till the day he ceases to belong thereto is mainly a question of the kindly government of other men, and would seem the very best preparation for the firm, kindly control of these bands. It is a question, too, of integrity of administration, and to an officer's success a strong suspicion of a dishonest act (though it may not be proved or drive him at once from the service) is fatal.

That is the view of an enlightened, intelligent officer who has spent the best years of his life on the frontier, actively engaged face to face with those Indians, and who knows whereof he testifies. It is of the very best evidence according to all the rules of courts of justice. I will go one step further. I will now read the statement made by William T. Sherman, the General of the Army of the United States. Will any one gainsay his testimony in a case like this? His integrity is beyond all question. His intelligence all will admit. His observation has enabled him to speak confidently of that whereof he speaks, because it has been his duty to make himself thoroughly conversant with the facts in regard to the correct treatment of the Indians. He has had personal observation because he has been out there among them and has judged for himself. When asked the question what he believes the true policy to be, he answered as I will read from the same document:

General Sherman was asked this question, on page 8:

What is your opinion as to the propriety of transferring the Indian and Pension Bureaus to the War Department?

I will confine what he stated exclusively to the Indian Bureau, because we have nothing here to do with the Pension Bureau. To that he answers:

The transfer of the Indian Bureau would result in economy and efficiency.

That is the opinion of General Sherman; but we are told by the Senator from Illinois that we hear nothing in regard to this transfer except from officers of the Army. Are we left to infer in these latter days of ours that the fact that a man wears the uniform of his country and marches under its flag thereby makes him unworthy of belief? Does it follow that because it has been made the duty of these officers to specially know the facts whereof they speak, that because they are officers of the Army, therefore they are unworthy of credit? Why, sir, the time was when the very fact that a man wore the uniform of his country gave him a carte blanche to the best society in America or in the world. I doubt not the same is true yet. But, sir, is the experience of William T. Sherman limited to the Army? Not at all. He has had large experience not only as an officer of the United States Army but in civil life. No man is better qualified to testify in regard to the true policy of the Government in respect to Indians than General Sherman, having as he has the experience and observation of the civilian as well as the soldier. But what further does he say?

The present Army is now stationed in small detachments at military posts, chiefly at or near these reservations, to keep the peace between these Indians and their white neighbors, between whom there has always existed a conflict of interest and natural hostility. Now, as the military authorities are already charged with the duty of keeping the peace—

We were told that if they were transferred to the War Department it meant war. The General of the Army tells you the duty of the Army is to keep the peace, and every one knows that the object of war is to secure peace—

Now, as the military authorities are already charged with the duty of keeping the peace, I am sure they will be the better able to accomplish this end if intrusted with the issue of the annuities, whether of money, food, or clothing. Each military post has its quartermaster and commissary, who can, without additional cost, make the issues directly to the Indians, and account for them; and the commanding officer can exercise all the supervision now required of the civil agent, in a better manner, because he has soldiers to support his authority, and can easily anticipate and prevent the minor causes which have so often resulted in Indian wars.

How? The very fact that you place the service under the control of an intelligent Army officer prevents those causes which result in war; and yet we are told that the transfer to the War Department means war.

In like manner, our country is divided into military departments and divisions, commanded by experienced general officers named by the President, who can fulfill all the functions now committed to Indian superintendents; and these, too, have near them inspectors who can promptly investigate and prevent the incipient steps that are so apt to result in conflict and war.

Why, sir, it would be impossible for me to present the ideas which I have upon this great question more clearly and lucidly than they are presented here by this able, learned, accomplished, and gallant officer.

Therefore, I firmly believe that the Army now occupies the positions and relations to the great mass of the Indian tribes that will better enable the Government to execute any line of policy it may deem wise and proper, than by any possible system that can be devised with civil agents.

Is that testimony worth nothing? When did it come about that you are going to trample under foot the solemn statements officially made by the highest officers in the American Army? I remember well—I have a feeling knowledge of that fact—when those who wore the blue were regarded as "without fear and without reproach in this country." They were the heroes of song and story. I think they are entitled to the credit of being in this case disinterested, intelligent, entirely credible, and reliable witnesses.

The Indians, more especially those who occupy the vast region west of the Mississippi, from the Rio Grande to the British line, are natural warriors—are natural warriors, and have always looked to the military rather than to the civil agents of the Government for protection or punishment.

Yes, sir, that is true; the General of the Army states the truth—

I state it here as a fact that you may start out to-day among the nomadic tribes a second lieutenant with a dozen men of the cavalry, with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the superintendent or the Secretary of the Interior, and the chiefs will pay deference to the officer without the slightest respect to the civilian more than is enforced by the presence of the troops. It is their nature. They are natural warriors, and they are taught to respect power, and they do respect power, and it is about the only thing that they do respect, from my knowledge of them.

But we are told that if this policy is adopted it means war. What does the General of the Army say?

And, were the troops to be withdrawn, instant war would result.

I am proceeding, Mr. President, on the theory that this is a question of fact, and, being so, that it is my duty, in support of the position which I have assumed, to introduce the best evidence of which the case is susceptible, and I am giving the evidence of men who were raised and educated by the Government and know whereof they testify, and are sent by the Government into that very country to make themselves personally cognizant of the facts in regard to the matter. They are the best witnesses.

Mr. President, I fear that I am occupying more time than I designed; but this is a very grave question to many of us. The Senator who occupies the chair [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] does not feel it as I do. The Senator on my right from Nebraska, [Mr. HITCHCOCK,] and other Senators whom I could name, whose States have suffered by Indian raids, feel the importance of this question; and we trust that the Senate will at least pay us the honor of listening to our arguments in behalf of the position which we have taken.

If it be the policy of the Government, as I believe it is, to save the remnant of these tribes, it can only be accomplished by and through military authority.

Ah! but we are told that if they are transferred to the military power it means extermination. The General-in-Chief of the Army says the only way to save the remnant of these tribes is by transferring them to the military authority.

Mr. LOGAN. Does not the Senator believe that if he would ask the officers of the Army if they could not perform the duties of the diplomatic corps better than they are being performed they would answer that they could; and so of every department of the Government, would he not get an affirmative answer to such a question?

Mr. MAXEY. I am sure I should not.

Mr. LOGAN. I think he would.

Mr. MAXEY. I regard the Army officers as high-minded honorable gentlemen; men as upright and as pure as the Senator from Illinois and myself. They speak in regard to this question because it has been the study of their life-time, and their testimony has for that reason been sought and brought out by the other House. There is not an officer of the cavalry or an officer of the infantry, from the highest to the lowest, but has served his apprenticeship right in the Indian country and is personally cognizant of that of which he speaks. I assume that General Sherman would not make the statements unless he knew the truth of them, and I know that he has been there among them. He has been on my own frontier, and I was very proud that he was there, because he made it safer for our people than it had been for years.

If it be the policy of the Government, as I believe it is, to save the remnant of these tribes, it can only be accomplished by and through military authority. These will obey orders and enforce any line of policy that may be prescribed for them by law or regulation.

He goes on then and says in regard to this idea which we have heard this evening:

The idea which prevails with some that the Army wants war with the Indians is not true. Such wars bring exposure, toil, risk, and privations, with no honor. Therefore it (the Army) naturally wants peace, and very often has prevented wars by its mere presence; and if intrusted with the exclusive management and control of the annuities and supplies as well as force, I think Indian wars will cease, and the habits of the Indians will be gradually molded into a most necessary and useful branch of industry—the rearing of sheep, cattle, horses, &c. In some localities they may possibly be made farmers.

That is the testimony of the General of the Army.

On page 26 of this book General Hancock gives the same testimony, and who will doubt the statement of that gallant soldier?

Question 9. What is your opinion as to the propriety of transferring the Indian and Pension Bureaus to the War Department?

Answer. I believe it would be a decided advantage to the country, to the Indian, and the pensioners to transfer those Bureaus to the War Department; and in regard to Indian matters especially, I may say that I believe there is no motive save the interests of the Indians and those of the country, which would lead Army officers to advocate or advise such a transfer, for it could but add to their labors and responsibilities, and would invite hostile criticism, injurious to the Army at large, should cases of maladministration by individuals occur.

On page 28 General Schofield gives the same testimony:

The transfer of the Indian and Pension Bureaus to the War Department would undoubtedly result in economy and honest administration, and would be wholly beneficial to the public service, provided too much of the labor of those Bureaus be not imposed upon the Army proper. The Army should not be burdened with duties not strictly military to such extent as to cripple its efficiency, or in the event of war to render necessary the sudden transfer of an important branch of the public service to untried civilians, in order that the Army officers might go to the field. The legitimate benefit that would be conferred upon those Bureaus by the transfer would arise mainly from the introduction into them of the fundamental principles upon which the military department is organized, and the civil departments also, of all well-administered governments; that is, the tenure of office dependent upon good behavior, instead of upon the ever-varying phases of political controversy, with the necessary machinery for the certain detection and punishment of official crimes. The difficulty of adopting this principle in the civil departments of our Government is doubtless very great, and the experiment, if anybody regards it in the light of an experiment, could not be more fairly made than by a transfer of the Indian and Pension Bureaus to the War Department.

On page 33 General McDowell says:

If, however, with the transfer of the Indian affairs, you will re-organize the Bureau by substituting commanding officers of posts for Indian agents, and military district and department commanders for superintendents of Indian affairs;

by having the officers of the Quartermaster's, Commissary, and Medical Departments of the Army make all contracts for Indian supplies, transport, care for, issue, and account for them; by having all payments to, or on account of, Indians made by the Pay Department of the Army, and by having an officer detailed by the War Department to act as Commissioner of Indian Affairs, I am of opinion it would be a good thing for the Indians, the Treasury, and the country, and a very disagreeable and thankless one for the Army.

Why, sir, according to the Baconian theory of induction the conclusion is absolutely irresistible, because here you have an array of intelligent, enlightened, and truthful witnesses, all converging to one common point, driving, burning the thought which they desire to enforce into the very hearts of those who hear it; we cannot avoid its irresistible force.

On page 37 General Terry says:

I have so little acquaintance with the business of the Bureau of Pensions that I am not able to express an opinion upon that part of this question which relates to it; but I am decidedly of opinion that the Bureau of Indian Affairs should be transferred to the War Department.

On pages 40 and 41 General Ord says:

Question. Do you think the transfer should be such as to put the entire control of the whole Indian matter into the possession of the War Department?

Answer. I think to have it mixed it would be worse than at present. Each Department would be able to accuse the other of short-comings. It ought to be entirely transferred, and, as far as practicable, under the control of permanent officers of the Army. It was formerly under control of the War Department, and officers were sometimes assigned to temporary duty in the Indian Bureau as ex officio agents. My father was Indian agent for fifteen or sixteen years; under the War Department nearly all the time.

Q. Tell us briefly what some of the advantages would be over the present system by the transfer of the control of the Indians entirely to the War Department.

A. Promptness in the delivery of rations and supplies. We have to deliver them now to troops in the immediate vicinity of the agents, and the same machinery, in a measure, could do both.

The reduction of the number of employés. A very large reduction would occur. The clerical duties here at Washington and at department headquarters performed by general-service men would be very materially reduced.

Another advantage would be maintaining peaceable relations, because, if we had to fight the Indians, we should want to do it as rapidly as possible. If we want to maintain peaceable relations, we ought to know the Indians thoroughly in time of peace and put the best men in as agents, men who would do their whole duty. The Indians, as a rule, respect force. They respect men who can successfully enforce the orders they have given. I have found wherever I have been that the military were successful with the Indians in California and Arizona, and the Indians were very well satisfied. When General Crook took charge in Arizona he had no trouble. I myself have gone right amid the wild Indians at war. I directed the establishment of the two posts spoken of in the testimony and know what they cost. I had some fourteen companies together up there to move the Indians just as winter was coming on; it begins there in October. I could not get the Department to tell me when they were going to move the agencies until the last minute. It cost the Government between $50,000 and $60,000 to move the troops and establish the posts.

On page 58 General Mackenzie says:

Should the Government propose to conduct its Indian affairs without reference to political party, its transfer to the War Department would be very advantageous to the Indians, and no particular disadvantage to the Army. If the question of party politics is to be kept in view in its management, with which the affairs of Indians have no rational connection, its transfer will be a very great disadvantage to the Army, and of no special benefit to anybody else.

This, of course, applies to all tribes who receive anything whatever from the Government, peaceable or hostile, and is entirely independent of any question of the employment of the force needed to sustain authority.

The wilder tribes, to the government of which allusion has been made in a former part of this paper, and with whom the presence of troops is so thoroughly understood that the mere mention of the fact is considered necessary, can only rationally be ruled by the War Department. It is a question, too, of integrity of administration, and to an officer's success a strong suspicion of a dishonest act (though it may not be proved, or drive him at once from the service) is fatal.

I will also read from the testimony of General Marcy, on page 144. Right here I want to stop a moment. Randolph B. Marcy is, in my judgment, one of the most intelligent and capable officers in the American Army. Some of the best reconnaissances which have ever been made in the western country, and notably in the State in which I live and west of me, were made by Randolph B. Marcy. The effect of his work of thirty years ago is felt along where I now live by the steam-horse running across the prairie. He is the Inspector-General of the Army, intimately familiar with Indian affairs, and hence his testimony is worthy of all credit. He has been in the Army nearly as long as I have been living. His position as Inspector-General shows the estimate in which he is held by the Army. He says on page 144:

That the transfer or the return of the Indian and Pension Bureaus to the War Department would be a measure of wisdom and economy does not, in my judgment, admit of a question.

Does anybody look into these things more carefully then the Inspector-General of the Army?

My reasons for this are set forth at length in a paper which I had the honor to furnish you a short time since.

This paper is to be found on page 145 at large. General Palmer, of the United States Army, who commenced in the Mexican war, in the year 1846 in the rifle regiment thirty years ago—I speak advisedly, because we were of the same class—and has served the most of his active life for thirty years upon the western borders among the Indians, in the cavalry and in the mounted rifles, says:

With regard to the transferring of the Indian and Pension Bureaus to the War Department, I will give it as my opinion that the pensioners of the Army could be paid by the disbursing officers of the Army without any great increase of the expense; and if the money appropriated for the Indians were placed in the hands of Army officers, it would all be disbursed fairly and honestly; but then what would become of the noble army of Indian agents who think it very hard if they cannot make a fortune in a very few years on a salary of $1,500 a year?

Ah, Mr. President, the grand fight that has been made outside of the Congress of the United States against the transfer of the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department is covered by that very expression. It is the noble army of martyrs at $1,500 a year that grow fat in four years. Look at your Red Cloud agency, look at the developments which have been made everywhere in proof of this fact.

It is said that these gentlemen are wonderfully Christian, in fact they have risen to the dignity of Christian statesmen, and therefore it will not do for an outside barbarian like myself to have anything to say in regard to them. I will let Captain Guy V. Henry give his statement, a captain in the Third Cavalry, and I judge from his rank, which is that of brevet colonel in the United States Army, that he has seen some service. He says:

As to the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, I should consider it a matter of economy, because the very officers who issued to the troops at Camp Robinson last winter, for instance, could have made the issues to the Indians at the same time, and thus have avoided the existence of this agency. So far as I have observed, I have never seen anything done to better the condition of the Indian by the Indian Department. I have never seen any instruction given in cultivating the soil; and, as to its Christianizing effect, I should say, from my experience, that it has been demoralizing. "Squaw-men" are very common out there; that is, men who are employed and tolerated at the agency, and keep their squaws. I do not make this assertion with reference to the agents, but to men who are employed at the agencies to assist them. This class of men generally come to the agencies in the winter and have as many of their squaws as they wish to keep, who are fed at the expense of the Government.

That is beautiful Christian statesmanship! It is one of the lovely effects of this beautiful system.

Some of these are white men and some are half-breeds; but most of them are the lowest class of white men we have out West.

And yet they are fed at the expense of this Government, as this officer says:

They have their teepies put up around the agencies, and keep their squaws there, who are counted in on the ration-returns and fed at the Government expense.

The question is then asked:

Are all these Indian agents not supposed to be Christian and pious men?

And he answers:

I suppose they have been selected on account of their pious inclinations, but I do not think the results seem to show any great amount of piety. I would not trust any of them I have ever seen, though there may be some honorable exceptions to the rule. They get demoralized after they get out there, even if they are good men when they started. I think, as a general thing, they are worse than the Indians.

General Tower has given his statement. I know of no man in the Army of broader mind than General Tower, and his testimony corresponds precisely with that of all the others whom I have named. I will read it:

Question 9. What is your opinion as to the propriety of transferring the Indian and Pension Bureaus to the War Department?

Answer. Of the wisdom of putting the Indian Bureau in the War Department I have no doubt.

I have now given the views of twelve officers of the United States Army, eleven of them among the most distinguished men in the Army, and whose personal character and moral integrity stand above and beyond all suspicion, and they all agree upon this question. So far, then, as we have gone, there can be no question in my mind that the transfer should be made to the War Department, making the War Department exclusively responsible, dividing no responsibility between the Interior Department and the War Department, having but one system of officers to furnish supplies and that under the control of the Army.

And, sir, my judgment about Army men is that, as a rule, they will do their duty anywhere. It was but a few years ago that on the western frontier, west of where I live some two hundred miles, our women and children were carried into captivity; the houses of our frontiersmen were burned down, the men were murdered, and women suffered worse than death. It was about that time that the General of the Army went on a tour of inspection into that country, and while he was there eight teamsters of the United States were fastened by Indians to a wagon and murdered in cold blood. That was the work of Satanta and Big Tree, the beautiful exponents of this glorious system of Christian statesmanship! The General had those men conveyed in irons to the State of Texas, and they were tried and sentenced to be hung, and the sentence was commuted by the governor to imprisonment for life. What was done by him? Were we getting peace and quiet from this peace power? Not one word of it; but these Indians were placed over at Fort Sill, in the Indian Territory, north of the Red River, and beyond our limits, and he placed General Mackenzie, one of the best officers that he had in his command, with the Fourth Cavalry, at Fort Sill; and it was only last Thursday that General Sherman told me that the peace which we have on the northwest frontier of Texas, which I am proud to say we now enjoy, is owing to the presence of General Mackenzie and the Fourth Cavalry at Fort Sill, and I believe it. I do not believe it is owing to your peace-policy at all. Take those troops away, and instantly you turn these savages loose on the frontiers of our country, to murder again and to burn our houses, steal our stock, and capture our women and children.

Sir, I say, in the language of Henry Clay in the Senate Chamber years ago, "I love my own country better than any other country; I love my own people better than any other people;" and it is because I do love them and because I know it is the duty of this Government to protect them that I stand here and assert that the true policy and the best protection for those people is to transfer the control of the Indians back to the War Department, where it justly and properly belongs.

Now, Mr. President, I have occupied more of the attention of the Senate than I had designed when I rose to speak; but I hope the Senate will pardon me. It is a question in which the people of Texas are most deeply interested; we have seven hundred miles of frontier, and we have suffered beyond almost all human endurance. We have suffered to such an extent that we, the people of Texas, at our own expense, have kept troops armed and equipped in the field at an expense ranging from half a million to $1,000,000 per annum, paid not by the Federal Government, but by the people of Texas for their own defense, because the troops furnished by the Federal Government were inadequate to complete protection. Turn this Bureau back into the War Department where it justly belongs; place it under the control of that clear-headed and able General of the Army who now controls the Army of the United States; have one system of disbursing officers, one system of commissaries, one system of quartermasters, one system of paymasters, and have one policy; compel these people to remain within their reservations, and teach them the methods of peace; teach them the great lesson which the Bible has taught us, that man must earn his living by the sweat of his brow. Why is an Indian better than I am? Why shall I work to support him in idleness? Teach him how to work, and make him work. Sir, there is but one means of controlling the Indian, and I assert it here according to the view I look at it, and I think I could, were it necessary, give my personal knowledge in addition to that which I have given here, because I understand this question practically—there is but one way of controlling the Indian, and that is by a manifestation of physical power, coupled with an exhibition of the will to exercise that power in case of necessity. It is by that means and that only you can control him. Treat him kindly; but with the Indian you must have a hand of iron, covered though it may be with the glove of silk; but the power must be there if you control him. If you want to protect your women and your children upon the frontier, if you wish to save the cabin of the hardy man who builds up and makes States from the incendiary's torch, if you wish to save the frontiersman from murder and his wife and daughters from a fate worse than murder, give the control of the Indian into that Department of the Government which has the physical power to make its will effective. It is the only way.

Now, Mr. President, I fully agree with the General of the Army that if you want to Christianize this man, to enlighten him, to humanize him, to give him schools, to give him churches, the best way possible to do that is to place him under the control of the Army of the United States, and make him work for his living. Sir, I am not one of those who believe that all men are dishonest or corrupt. I am not one of those who believe that honorable officers would come before the Congress of the United States and testify from an interested stand-point for the sake of power. I do not believe it. I believe that among the best, the truest, the most honorable portion of the employés of this Government are to be found the officers of the Army of the United States. That is my candid conviction. I am told, and we are referred to the fact, what a dangerous thing it is to intrust power to an army. Why, Mr. President, are the brave men of the United States, a people of 44,000,000, afraid of a little handful of 35,000 men constituting the Army of the United States? No, sir. The Constitution says that it is the duty of this Government to provide for the common defense, and the Army is necessary for that purpose. No man in all the land would be more opposed to a government supported by the military arm than I would. I remember reading that the Pretorian guards got control of the Roman empire, and put up the crown to the highest bidder, and Didius became the purchaser for a price paid to the Pretorian guards. I never want to see that time, and I never will see it so long as the strength of the Government rests on the love of the people. The way to make the people love the Government is to protect them. That is all I ask, protect us.

I have now said all that I care to say on this subject. I trust that the amendment of the Senate committee will not be adopted, but that the third section of the House bill will be concurred in by the Senate.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, I regret I was not aware that this question would be presented in the Indian appropriation bill. A bill passed the House of Representatives a short time ago to transfer the Indian Bureau from the Interior Department to the War Department. That bill was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, of which I am a member, and is there yet, not having yet been considered. I regret this, as I look on this question as one of the most interesting as well as one of the most important that can be presented to the consideration of Congress.

I listened with great attention to the speech made by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] and it struck me that he only presented one argument in opposition to this proposed transfer, which was the extravagance of the War Department. He compared the expenses of the Indian Bureau when under the War Department with the expenses of the same Bureau now under the control of the Interior Department, and in making that contrast according to his figures the expenses are much less now than they were heretofore. I do not believe in the accuracy of the statistics read by the Senator. I know and we all know that nothing in the world will lie so effectually, and apparently so logically, as figures when you do not put them exactly in the right place; and I am convinced from my observation, with some little experience in the administration of the Indian Bureau, that the expenses are now too high by perhaps double, and that they would be much less in the War Department, and ought to be much less even if the Bureau remains where it is now.

This subject of Indian administration, or the treatment of the Indian question, comes to us in a double aspect. First, we are here brought face to face with a people not civilized, who are yet barbarians, who are in our power, and under our control, and called the wards of the Government. This imposes upon us a duty of the very highest character. What can we do to promote not only the well-being of the Indian in his present condition as an uncivilized man, but what can we do to bring this race to a condition of civilization? If he can be civilized, and it is within our power to accomplish this, it is plainly our duty to use all the means within our control to enable him to attain this great blessing.

While I am not prepared to deny as a great philosophic fact that the North American Indian can be civilized, I am prepared to say that thus far all our efforts which have been made to civilize him have been utter failures, and now I see nothing in the future which gives me any hope that we shall succeed any better hereafter. It seems to me that that race is destined to pass away, and I have often thought that when the vessel that brought Christopher Columbus across the then unknown Atlantic Ocean touched the shores of the island of San Salvador the fate of the North American Indian was fixed and his doom was sealed; that at that moment his destiny was written upon a plate of adamant with a pen of steel; and that time itself would never erase the inscription; and from that day, nearly four hundred years ago, he has been melting before the rays of the bright sun of civilization like snow under a midsummer sun.

At that time the islands of the Gulf of Mexico, all those rich and beautiful islands of that great ocean, were peopled with this race. They were called Indians because Columbus, when he touched the shores of the island of San Salvador, believed he had discovered the Indies; not the West Indies, as now called, but the East Indians. The islands of San Domingo, of Jamaica, of Cuba, all the archipelago, indeed, of the Gulf of Mexico, were inhabited by this race. They have all disappeared, and are no longer to be found there. They are gone, gone more than a century ago; and history has preserved only the names of a few great leaders and of the different tribes.

How is it in our own country? What has become of those numerous and powerful tribes formerly settled upon the Atlantic coast? What has become of the Pequods who lived on the shores of the Connecticut River and visited the mountains and valleys of Massachusetts? Where are they? Gone! Where are the brave and warlike Narragansetts who had their home on the shores of the magnificent bay that bears their name to this day? Where are they? Gone, gone and passed away like a dream of the night more than a hundred years ago. Where are the Iroquois, the Oneidas, the Tuscaroras, the Senecas, the Hurons, the Mohawks, and all those different tribes that formed that powerful combination known as the confederacy of the Six Nations? They have disappeared and melted away. And in my own day, in my own section of the country, where Indians were once numerous, they have dwindled down to a few and nearly disappeared, and these few have gone away to the far West. It must be so; it cannot be otherwise. Whether it could have been otherwise by having pursued another system and a different policy from the beginning I am not prepared to say. I speak of the present system as a failure. If this people who were found here when the Europeans first came could have been civilized or not under a different system is a question I do not pretend to be able to decide. I speak of their condition in connection with the policy which was pursued.

Civilization in contact with barbarism; the enlightened man in contact with the barbarian! Sir, it is the old fable of the earthen vessel in contact with the iron vessel. Which one will break? Which one will give way? It must be one or the other. Civilization of course will triumph. This civilization has been going on with the history of man traveling from the east to the west, and in its onward march it has come in contact with this race in the New World. Face to face—antagonistic in every thing—the result has been here what it has been elsewhere in every age where a superior race was brought in contact with a weaker one.

Mr. President, I am a friend of the Indian. There are many reasons why this should be so. My earliest recollections in my boyhood are of the most agreeable character in connection with Indian children and Indian sports in my own native town. I have tried to be their friend on this floor. I am in favor of liberal appropriations, not only for their civilization, but for their actual support when they are in a destitute condition. Yet, friend of the Indian as I profess to be, and willing to take the responsibility of voting proper appropriations so as to aid him in his lowly and dependent condition, nevertheless I can very well see that his fate is sealed if the present wretched policy is continued.

The word "civilization" is upon the lips of everybody. But civilization is a growth which comes to maturity very slowly indeed. The white race itself marched toward perfect civilization but with slow steps. It was the work of centuries, indeed of many centuries. How many years after Cæsar conquered the Gauls before they were civilized? How many hundred years after the Romans visited the shores of the Rhine before the Germans were fully civilized? How many years after Cæsar landed on the shores of Britain before the early settlers of the British islands were also civilized? As already said, it is a growth slow and gradual.

Has the Government at any time respected the rights of the Indian when he occupied any portion of territory needed by the white race? Has the Congress of the United States ever respected them? Does Congress to-day respect the Indian in his right? Does this body that now hears me respect these Indian rights? We have had questions presented this session within the last few days so plain that the blind could see, where the justice in favor of the Indian was so manifest, so evident, that nobody could misunderstand them; and yet they were not respected. Who can deny that the Sioux Indian is entitled according to the laws and treaties to the country known as the Black Hills, where he and his forefathers have been for untold generations, and which the law recognizes as his? Yet, because there may be scattered over this country, on its mountain-sides and valleys, a few grains of gold, perhaps enough to invite white men to go there, it is only by management and industry and persuasion that we have been able to pass a bill by a bare majority in this body to appoint a commission to go to that country to try and reconcile the Indians to this flagrant spoliation, made in the face of the most solemn treaties. The rights of the Indians have not been respected by us at any time. Even in the making of treaties with them the object of our own commissioners has been to drive the best bargain, and in many instances advantage was taken of his ignorance. This humiliating fact cannot be denied, and I feel it to be my duty to state it.

As I said a while ago, civilization is a word found in the mouth of a great many persons, but which is not thoroughly understood; and, as I said also, it is of slow growth, and like everything that grows, whether it be in the animal or vegetable world, it must come from within.

We are told that the Creeks, Choctaws, Cherokees, and Chickasaws, and some others of those Indians south of my own State and west of Arkansas, are highly civilized. Such is not exactly the fact. The Choctaw and Chickasaw and Cherokee, of full blood, are many of them very nearly as savage to-day as they were when Jackson fought their forefathers. The civilized Indians are those who are partly white, half or less. It is the white blood infused into them that has brought them to a degree of civilization, and I acknowledge that many of them are civilized, and among them I recognize some personal friends who are men of character, ability, and education; but they are not pure Indians; they have Indian blood, but the white blood is mixed with it; and it is that white blood which is the cause of their civilization. There may be, and no doubt there are, a few full-blooded Indians who, being surrounded by civilizing circumstances, have made fair progress.

We have for years expended large sums of money to educate Indians. There is at this day on the Pawnee reservation, near Omaha, a school-house called a college that cost some $50,000, to educate the Pawnee children. A few years ago these Indians were the most cruel and savage in that whole portion of the country. They were not numerous, but brave and valiant, and in constant war with the Sioux. They were brought to this reservation, and efforts made to educate them, but the attempt has utterly failed. Will anybody tell me that he ever saw or heard of a Pawnee Indian who had been educated at this college? Yet large appropriations were made for it year after year. Of all absurdities, this is undoubtedly the greatest. It has cost immense sums of money, and for whose benefit, excepting a few lazy fellows pretending to be the teachers and instructors of these poor people?

The first step toward civilizing a barbarian is to localize him and teach him the love of home and one wife. This I admit is not a very easy thing to do, but on the contrary one of the very hardest to impress on his mind. The love of home and the family ties of one wife and children are the first step; and until you have taught him this lesson, it is not worth while to build colleges for his education. I have already said the first lesson is to localize him and to teach and create around him the family ties. Then the next step is to put in his hand a hoe and an ax, and teach him how to work, however so little, enough if possible to feed one cow, which will give milk for his children. After he has found that by labor a cow can be fed, you may create an ambition in him to have two cows, and to feed these two cows it will require just double as much work as it did to support one, and then he may wish to have four, and then eight. When he has attained this point, his education in the way of civilization has commenced, and not before.

The hunter's life is the primitive condition of man, not only of the Indian, but of all and in all ages. The next step is the shepherd's. I do not say that education is a bad thing, but before you educate you must teach not only the love of labor, but how to work and also create a necessity for it, which is done by the wants of the family. The first and great law of God is that man must earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, and this law he must first obey as the first step toward civilization; and if you have created for him a home and family ties and instilled the love of one wife and of children, his progress may be onward. But has this been our system and is it the system now? No, sir; a sickly sentimentality, not true philosophy, has from the beginning asked for large appropriations of money to educate a race who had not taken the first step; and the consequence is that not only has the money been utterly wasted, but the poor Indian has been the sufferer; and instead of life, we have given him death; and hence he has nearly disappeared from the land. With good intentions, for the want of wisdom all our efforts have only proved to be in hostility to his well being.

Having passed from the hunter to the pastoral state, the next step is the agricultural, and this is the perfection of the material civilization. From this on education is a requisite to any further advance. We have reversed that law. We found him a hunter, and while in this state we have attempted to educate him; this has been a failure and also fatal, for we have taught him all the vices and vicious habits of civilization without its virtues. An educated Indian has no place among his people, and has lost the manly virtues of his forefathers.

Let us suppose a graduate of Yale College to return to his tribe and native home. The next thing is what can he do? What mission is open to him? He cannot be a member of Congress as so many whites are anxious to be, for his people have no congress. He cannot be a lawyer, for the time has not yet come when this useful profession is necessary. He cannot be a physician, for the reason that these children of nature have a knowledge of many simple remedies furnished by the herbs and plants of the valleys with which they cure their maladies. Then what can he do? His education is his misfortune. What can an educated Indian do among Indians? An educated Indian among Indians is a lost Indian; and as he has lost the rude virtues and warlike habits of his fathers, he becomes an object of contempt; and the only way for him to restore himself to his proper position in his tribe is to put off the habiliments of the civilized man and put on the clout and the leggings and the moccasins of his forefathers, and to learn how to hunt the elk, the deer, and the buffalo, and to prove himself brave in war. These are the virtues of that condition of life, and without which there is neither fame nor distinction.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that so in the Indian nations of the Indian country, among the Cherokees, and Chickasaws, and Creeks? Is there not a pretty large body of Indians who have acquired education?

Mr. BOGY. If my friend had done me the honor to listen to the previous portion of my speech the question would not be necessary. I will, however, answer him, although he is disturbing a very handsome train of thought that I was in. [Laughter.]

The Cherokees, Choctaws, and Chickasaws, as I said a while ago, of full blood, are very nearly in the same condition they were when Jackson fought them upwards of fifty years ago. There may be a few exceptions; I know a few myself who, being surrounded by powerful circumstances, have thrown off the leggings and put on the pantaloons—and are certainly civilized, and are also good men—but I think this number not large. Certainly many of the pure bloods are not civilized.

The Cherokees and Choctaws who are civilized and those others who have made some progress are not generally pure Indians. I have known many such myself, and as I said a while ago, I recognize several of them as my personal friends.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But have they not codes of laws, of civilized laws, which punish the having an abundance of wives and which regulate social affairs just about as they do in Missouri or in Vermont?

Mr. BOGY. I will answer the Senator that he is mistaken in regard to the condition of these Indians. I wish to speak of them with the utmost kindness and the utmost truth as far as I know. These Indians have a code of laws of their own, and have made considerable progress in civilization. For more than one hundred years there have been a pretty large number of white men intermarried with these southern tribes, and how much is due to this circumstance the Senator from Vermont can judge as well as I can.

I do not see that there has been any progress in civilizing the Indian race—I speak of the Indian of pure blood—by anything which is the result of our legislation. For one hundred years back it has been an utter failure.

Mr. MAXEY. Let me ask if Ross, Ridge, Boudinot, and Bell, of the Cherokee Nation, to which the Senator refers, are not all largely more white than Indian; and are they not the men who control the Cherokee Nation?

Mr. BOGY. I think they are.

Mr. LOGAN. Did the Senator never see a civilized Indian, one who had no white blood in him?

Mr. BOGY. I think I have seen a few that were civilized, and who were dressed like white men, and spoke English, and had many of the virtues of the white man, and also his vices.

Mr. LOGAN. I can say to the Senator that I knew an Indian without white blood, who was a staff officer on General Grant's staff, a finely educated and thoroughly civilized man, and a gentleman anywhere.

Mr. BOGY. I know him very well myself. He is certainly a civilized man and a gentleman, and belongs to the Oneida Indians in New York; and I hold him in the highest respect. That would not prove the proposition, however, any more than one swallow proves a summer. It is possible, and as I said a while ago, you will find among the Choctaws and Chickasaws and Cherokees a few full-blooded Indians who are civilized; but when we speak of the civilization of those Indians west of Arkansas and south of Missouri we really have in our mind's eye the Rosses and Boudinots and Adairs and Vanns, and those men who have in their veins but very little Indian blood.

Mr. LOGAN. I have a letter from Mr. Ross, Mr. Adair, and the men whom the Senator has just mentioned, protesting against the very thing he designs to do.

Mr. BOGY. I have no doubt about that. Those men are civilized. There is very little Indian in them; the white blood preponderates. But I say, as a general proposition, as a philosophical fact, that you cannot civilize a barbarian race yet in the hunter state by first approaching the intellect and trying to teach it to read and write. It is against the law of sense and sound philosophy, as well as against reason and experience. And here is the mistake we have made for upward of one hundred years.

I am the friend of the Indian and would like to promote his happiness and elevate his condition; and, as I have been so from earliest youth, I do not propose to abandon him now, and the change I now advocate is what I consider for his good, and, indeed, as the only way to arrest his rapid extinction. But, while I am his friend, I am not blind to his condition. I see for him no future, excepting to go as soon as possible on reservations of sufficient size; and, if I had my way, these should be large, and on which he would be compelled to remain, and there made to learn how to use the ax and the hoe. If his home had been respected from the beginning, it is possible he might have made some progress; but he has had no home, no place or spot of earth he could call his own and on which he could form any idea how long he would be allowed to remain. He has been an Ishmaelite by force, and the heavy hand of the Government was all the time on him; and yet, while this was so, the sentimentalists of this country were all the time trying to educate him. Does not the bare statement of the facts show how foolish and ridiculous such attempts were? No home, no country, no property but his bow and his arrows, with no fixed family ties, because he had no home to protect these, an outcast, no one respecting his rights and no one to defend him. How can such a man receive education? How can he be made to believe that your religion is true which could sanction such cruelties? This Capitol stands where the Algonquins formerly had their home. This was the most powerful tribe in North America, and roamed from the banks of the Potomac and Chesapeake to the far-distant shores of Massachusetts and Maine. They were brave, numerous, and powerful. Yet they have passed away, their name barely remembered; for I remember a short time ago, when a new Territory was about being created, that I proposed this name in the place of Pembina—which is not an Indian name, but a corruption of two French words—that many Senators came to me for an explanation of the name. As a matter of Indian history, I will state that the Delawares and Shawnees are Algonquins—a few of these remain, a mere remnant, partly civilized, and now living on the borders of my State south of Kansas.

I look upon the present system, besides its real cruelty to a dependent race who ought to have been protected, as the promoter and abettor of fraud. It is a system without a head and without any responsibilty resting on anybody. Even an honest man in office, as I believe the present Commissioner to be, is utterly powerless to arrest fraud or even to expose it. All of us, when in executive session, have had to vote on the nominations of Indian agents. Who knows them? Really no one who is responsible under any law. The President does not know them, the Secretary of the Interior does not, nor does the Commissioner; they are said to be recommended by the different churches. However good and holy these may be, they are not responsible under any law. The consequence is that at no time before have we ever had such bad agents as now. Their duties call them far away, where there is no supervision, and the consequence is they yield to the first temptation, and the majority become dishonest, and instead of being the friend and protector of the Indian are his worst enemy, robbing him of the small pittance he receives from the Government under the sanction and cover of his office. This, I regret to say, I believe to be the case with a majority of these agents.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to one fact? He was speaking a while ago about civilization, and he is still on that point. Will he allow me to suggest what he will find by examining the reports of the Superintendents of Indian Affairs? The Indians of the Indian Territory, the Cherokees and others, cultivate 500,000 acres of land; they have an agricultural fair, have 200 free schools, 9 high schools, 10,000 church members, 6,000 children at school—mostly full-blooded Indians. Does that show any civilization?

Mr. BOGY. That is very good in that report beyond a doubt, but this is subject to much explanation. We all know how these reports are made and how false they are in point of the real truth. What is a school? It may be large or it may be small; it may be good or worse than nothing. All such statements are made for an object, and I attach but little importance to them.

As to the cultivation in that country I admit it does exist, but this is in accordance with my policy, that is to localize them and keep them on a reservation, so that they shall no longer be hunters, but from necessity be compelled to work and cultivate the earth. To do this with the wild Indians requires the strong arm of the Army; otherwise he will roam in pursuit of the game, and will not remain on his reservation. Nothing short of the military will make him remain there.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator spoke very highly of Mr. Ross a while ago, an educated gentleman, did he not?

Mr. BOGY. I did.

Mr. LOGAN. And of Mr. Adair?

Mr. BOGY. Of course I did.

Mr. LOGAN. This statement is signed by them.

Mr. BOGY. Suppose it is, what of it?

This report would indicate a very high degree of education and refinement in that country, as also a high condition of agriculture. Yet we know this is not so; not but that there is some education there and also a fair progress made in farming, but not to the degree that the reading of this report would lead one to believe. In that country there are many white people; some of whom are married with women of the tribe and some are not. It is also traversed from north to south by a railroad, and hence they are in constant contact with the white race and surrounded with civilizing influences. Indeed it is surprising they are not more advanced than they are, and only shows, what I said at the outset, that the progress of civilization is slow and goes on only from generation to generation, and not from one individual to another.

Mr. LOGAN. From 1849 to the present time those roving tribes of the plains that we had to fight nearly every morning when I first passed through their country are now the most of them on reservations, and are quiet, peaceable Indians. Does the Senator call that any advance?

Mr. BOGY. Of course that does not controvert the fact which I stated.

Mr. LOGAN. It only proves that since 1849 some of the wild, roving savages that were thirsting for blood at that time are now quiet, peaceable Indians.

Mr. BOGY. Why?

Mr. LOGAN. Because they have been taught to be peaceable.

Mr. BOGY. Because the Army is there in sight of them, and they dare not move for fear of the bayonets being thrust in their side. That is the reason.

This does not in the least disprove what I have said. The Indians can be localized and subjugated by force and be made to remain on a reservation; but this can only be done by employing the Army. No wild tribe of the plains would long remain on a reservation if the Army was not close by to chastise if he left. To deny this is to deny the plainest proposition.

Mr. LOGAN. When I traverse this country I am now more afraid of the James brothers than the Indians.

Mr. BOGY. I am not responsible for the fears or the timidity of the Senator. That is his own lookout. I am myself not afraid of the white man of the frontier. I have been much among them, and I have not yet been killed; and I will say more, I never have been insulted by a brave frontier man. These men may be rude, but under this rough exterior there beats not only a brave but a generous heart.

Mr. MAXEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois a question. He referred a moment ago to a very intelligent Indian who was a member of the President's staff when he was General of the Army, and who was also formerly Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Did the Senator refer to Colonel Parker?

Mr. LOGAN. I did.

Mr. MAXEY. I will state to the Senator that Colonel Parker, who is a very intelligent Indian, favors the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. I will read what he says:

It is greatly to be regretted that this beneficent and humane policy had not been adhered to, for it is a fact not to be denied that at this day Indian trading licenses are very much sought after, and when once obtained, although it may be for a limited period, the lucky possessor is considered as having already made his fortune.

The eagerness also with which Indian agencies are sought after and large fortunes made by the agents in a few years, notwithstanding the inadequate salary given, is presumptive evidence of frauds against the Indians and the Government.

Many other reasons might be suggested why the Indian Department should altogether be under military control; but a familiar knowledge of the practical working of the present system would seem to be the most convincing proof of the propriety of the measure.

It is pretty generally advocated by those most familiar with our Indian relations and, so far as I know, the Indians themselves desire it.

Civil officers are not usually respected by the tribes, but they fear and regard the military, and will submit to their counsels, advice, and dictation when they would not listen to a civil agent.

I put that against the paper introduced here by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LOGAN. I had no reference to any views of Mr. Parker. I only spoke of him as a civilized Indian.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator will permit me, a statement was introduced here that the Cherokees were opposing the transfer. Here is a statement from a highly intelligent man, who is a full-blooded Indian.

The expenses of the Indian Bureau have increased from $1,500,000 within a few years to the enormous sum of $8,000,000 a year, and there are less than 300,000 Indians.

Mr. ALLISON. Does not the Senator from Missouri know that the sum provided for the Osages this morning is not to be given to the Indians, but is to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior in the purchase of plows, hoes, farming implements, and in the erection of houses and homes under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. BOGY. Of course I know it; but does the Senator believe that the Secretary will go down there himself to superintend this expenditure? Here is an expenditure of $200,000 made to enable these Indians to farm. They have good lands. This sum of money was paid to them last year. There are 3,000 of these Indians, including the men, women, and children. This shows the extreme viciousness of this agent system. This large sum is recommended by him when it is not necessary, and the plows and farming implements that you will furnish him will be taken immediately to the first whisky shop or store and there exchanged. These Indians should be made to work, and under a good system this would be done.

So it is that all our efforts heretofore made, and well meant and well intended, to civilize this people and to educate them, have been failures, because the agencies and appliances and the system, everything indeed was bad and defective. The head was too far removed from the place where the duties of the office were discharged, and for this reason alone there was no responsibility. Will there be any improvement if this Bureau is transferred to the War Department. If I did not believe this I would not advocate it; but to my mind this is plain and conclusive. The Army is a regular and permanent body; the officer holds his position during life. He is a man of education, and must be a man of character to remain in the Army. All his surroundings protect him and fortify him against low and venal temptations. It is a chain, going link by link from one to the other, regular subordination as well as organization, and so arranged that it is difficult if not nearly impossible for one officer to do any very great wrong. Again, we should not overlook the fact that the head of the Army, whoever he might be, would feel very great responsibility to have this branch of the public service faithfully and vigilantly done. The present head of the Army certainly gives us the very highest guarantee from his known character that fraud would not be tolerated that ever got to his knowledge.

Again, it is said that the Army is likely to encourage Indian wars. This, in my estimation, is the reverse of the fact. All their interests lead to peace, and not to war. No reputation calculated to tempt a man of ambition can be acquired in this character of warfare. While the danger and the hardships are great, the crop of glory would be small.

It is also a fact well worthy of consideration that by the transfer of the board Army officers will take the place of the Indian agents, and in this way from sixty to seventy agents now receiving large pay would be dispensed with, and this without any expense, the Army officer receiving only the pay he is entitled to as an officer. All contracts for supplies would be made by the Quartermaster and Commissary of the Army, and the rations furnished the Indians under regulations of one of these officers. This would furnish such checks and guards as to make fraud impossible. The Indian would then receive all the Government pays for and has agreed to furnish him. This we know is not the case now. We all know the frauds perpetrated in this very thing.

Mr. LOGAN. I state it as a fact shown by the record, which I can present here as I did to-day, that the beef at all the different Indian stations bought by the Army costs more than the beef bought by the Indian Bureau; the corn bought by the Army costs more than the corn for the Indian Bureau; the flour costs more than the flour bought by the Indian Bureau.

Mr. BOGY. As a matter of course it all does cost more.

Mr. LOGAN. Why?

Mr. BOGY. For the simplest reason in the world. The Army pays for what it gets, and it gets what it pays for. An Indian contractor will agree to sell beef for one cent a pound if necessary to secure the contract, but he will deliver you that beef, perhaps, several times over, or charge for five hundred pounds, when, in point of fact, he only delivered one hundred; this is an old trick well understood and successfully played.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Senator why is it that the transportation of the Army costs more than the transportation of the Indian Department?

Mr. BOGY. I will answer the Senator once for all, and then I will object to his disturbing me any further.

The answer to this question of the Senator is virtually the same as was made to his first question, which is simply that in the case of the Army the contractors are made to carry out their agreement to the letter, while in the case of the Indian contract this is not the fact. The agreement is not carried out because of collusion with the agent and sometimes his utter incapacity; for many of them are very ignorant and know nothing of business. The fact that contracts are not faithfully carried out under the present system is one of the main reasons for the change, so as to apply a remedy to this shameful and long-standing wrong.

I wish the Senator to understand that I am arguing the general proposition that the organization of the Indian Department at present is so defective that it inevitably leads to fraud for the want of responsibility and for the want of proper organization. That is what I mean.

Mr. LOGAN. Does not the Senator know that every Indian agent was at one time removed, that every man connected with the Indian Department was removed, and that Army officers, called supernumerary officers, were detailed by President Grant and placed in charge of the Indians at every Indian post?

Mr. BOGY. That may be; but if the Senator will recognize that I have the floor I will go on; I am unwilling to be further disturbed.

I am not here to vindicate the Army, because it is not necessary that I should do so. Neither do I want to assail the Indian agents because they are Indian agents. I attack a system which in my opinion leads to fraud and to dishonesty, and in place of a bad system I would introduce the Army, because of its perfect organization.

The Senator read this morning from a paper stating that some years ago, while the Indian Bureau was under the War Department, at Leavenworth goods that cost a certain figure were delivered to the Indians at another figure. I understood the Senator to say that they were delivered so by the War Department. Upon inquiry, he corrected this. He stated that axes that cost thirty-seven and a half cents were sold for $2.50.

The answer to this is simply that these were the prices fixed by the Indian traders, over whom the War Department had no control whatever. They were licensed by the Bureau in this city or the superintendent in Saint Louis, and had the power to do as they please in carrying on this trade with the Indians.

I do not wish to be understood as saying that the Army is a very economical department; far from it. I believe, on the contrary, its expenses are too large and call loudly for reduction, and I am willing and ready to join the Senator from Illinois or any other to apply the pruning-knife. Nevertheless while this is the fact, it is not as high in proportion as $8,000,000 for the Indian service. I believe this sum could be reduced fully one-half if your Indians were placed on reservations and kept there by the Army. I believe the time has come when our Indian policy must change and when all the Indians within our borders must be brought within certain reservations, and thus be localized. The reservations ought to be large. We have a vast territory and can give them plenty of room. In time the land will come back to us, as their title is only possessory.

While I believe that Indian wars are now brought about by the Army because of the conflict between the civil and military, yet I believe that if the responsibility was thrown on the Army to keep the Indians in subjection and maintain peace this would not be the case. There is a constant conflict now between the Army officer and the Indian agent, a clashing of authority. Orders are issued from the Interior Department, and orders are issued from the War Department, and then other orders are issued by the Indian agents, and finally orders are issued by commanding officers in the field; one conflicting with the other. It is "confusion worse confounded." Harmonize all this by placing the whole matter under the control of the Army and hold it responsible to the country, and I believe honestly that peace would be the result, and that speedily too, and great economy be gained; and further, that the Indian would soon be forced to believe that the time had come when he, like the white man, had to work for his living; and whenever he is taught this, he has learned the first lesson in civilization and taken the first step.

There appears to be a great misapprehension on this subject as to the effect of this transfer. Senators argue as if this would take from Congress its present legislative powers. Nothing of this character is contemplated, nor could this in any way be the fact. The same power we have and exercise now we would have then; not the slightest change in this particular. This branch of the subject has been treated at very great length by different Senators on the other side. I do not think it important to dwell on the point, but simply to say that these lengthy arguments have no foundation in fact, none whatever. This being so, it is answer sufficient.

Mr. LOGAN. Inasmuch as the Senator questions the veracity of some of the statements made by the reports, here is a report made in 1833, while the Indian Bureau was in the War Department. Lewis Cass, being Secretary of War, was required to report statistics in reference to the Indians of the different tribes and everything in connection with them, their manner of treatment, &c., to the House of Representatives. I find that "Mr. H. Everett, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, made the following report," on page 96:

Whether competition among traders after the abandonment of the factory system has answered the expectation of the Government will appear by examining the prices now charged in the Indian country.

The traders were then under the control of the War Department. The War Department had a board, as they have now, at the trading-posts, the Indian traders being under the supervision of the Army at the different Indian posts.

Who would have supposed—

Says this report—

that on the borders of the navigable waters of the Missouri, no farther west than Fort Leavenworth, guns which cost in Saint Louis $7 are sold for $50.

Squaw-axes which cost 37½ cents sold at $2. A double handful of salt, which cost 62 cents per bushel, sold at $1; five and six gallon kettles, costing 25 cents per pound, sold at $12

The report goes on further and says:

Who would have supposed that on the navigable waters of the Upper Missouri the Indians would be compelled to pay the following prices:

Articles.	Cost in Saint Louis.	Sold at—
For a yard of strouding, costing per yard	$1 80	$8 00
1 three-point Mackinac blanket	4 00	12 00
1 two-and-a-half-point Mackinac blanket	3 00	10 00
American calico, per yard	16	1 00
English calico, per yard	22	1 50
Indian guns, per piece	7 50	25 00
Gunpowder, per pound	30	1 50
Tobacco, per pound	7	1 00
Hoes, per piece	40	2 50
Vermilion, per pound	1 50	7 50
Whisky, per gallon	25	16 00
Blue strouding, per yard	80	3 buffalo robes.
White beads, per pound	35	3 00
Tobacco, per pound	5	1 00

Mr. BOGY. Does the Senator intend to read the whole invoice?

Mr. LOGAN. No; but the Senator disputed my statement and I wanted to prove what I said by records which no man can dispute.

Mr. BOGY. What report is that?

Mr. LOGAN. I stated that that was a report made by Mr. Horace Everett on the request of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, made to the House of Representatives, and the detailed statement is given to the House of Representatives by the Secretary of War, Lewis Cass.

Many other articles are specified in the schedules referred to, marked E., F., G.

There is no reason to doubt the fact that one company has now in operation an extensive distillery of ardent spirits at the mouth of the Yellowstone River, where it is said alcohol reduced to proof is exchanged with Indians at $64 per gallon, and when carried to the interior at a much higher price.

Mr. BOGY. I have nothing to say about that bill of items; let that be as it may; if it proves anything it proves the correctness of my argument. A vigilant commanding officer would have stopped this dishonest traffic practiced by Indian traders.

Under the new system, which would be inaugurated, of placing Indians on reservations and feeding them, the rations could be given out as they are given to the soldiers, regularly, of given weight and quality.

I do not forget the duty resting upon us to protect this dependent people and to do all in our power for their well-being, and as far as possible to lead them on from the ignorance of barbarism and the darkness of paganism to civilization and Christianity. I am not unmindful of my duty in this respect, and if I believed that this transfer would in any way prevent us from discharging our entire duty in these respects I would oppose it. I am fully satisfied, on the contrary, that the well-being of this race, as well as its civilization and ultimately his becoming a Christian, will all be promoted by the change. We have had many Indian wars in this country, which have entailed very large expenses on the Government; but Indian wars should be a thing of the past, and with any wisdom on our part cannot again ever occur. The Indian is not now what his forefathers were; he has no longer a vast and boundless unpeopled territory to roam over. The white race surrounds him on every side, and the time has come when he must cease to be a hunter or he must cease to exist. The decision of this question is left with him. The law of necessity, growing out of the spread of population, makes it plain what he must expect hereafter. It cannot be permitted that a few thousand hunters will remain in possession of the interior of this continent as mere hunters. The earth was created for a better purpose, and it must be made to yield food for the human family. Hence he must retire to a reservation, and there kept under the surveillance of intelligent Army officers, where he will be taught to work for his living, and where the teachers of religion will impart to his mind the great lesson which leads to a happier life hereafter.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I rise at this late hour in the session and at this period of the debate to make a proposition which I hope will meet with the approbation of the friends and the opponents of the proposition that is now pending. I am in favor myself of the transfer of the Indian Department to the charge of the Secretary of War; but I am convinced that the proposition that is now before the Senate in the bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations is ill-advised, improvidently drawn, and incapable of accomplishing the results that I desire to see obtained.

A bill has passed the House of Representatives, numbered 2677, to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department, which is elaborate in its details, well guarded, and, in my judgment, calculated to accomplish the results that I suppose are intended by the third section of the bill now before the Senate.

I am still further embarrassed by the precedent that has been heretofore established to resist legislation upon appropriation bills, and I should regret exceedingly to be compelled to depart from that by voting against the amendment and in favor of the third section as it stands in the bill now before the Senate.

I desire, therefore, to propose that the debate on this amendment shall be informally suspended; that the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to report House bill No. 2677 immediately, and that the debate continue upon that bill; that the vote be taken, and we shall then be able to ascertain what the sense of the Senate is, be relieved from all embarrassments on the pending question, and determine whether or not the Senate is willing to vote for the transfer from the Interior Department to the Department of War relieved from all these complications that surround us in the way in which it is now presented. Of course, I am aware that this can only be done by a common understanding or unanimous consent, and I trust that the suggestion will be met in the spirit in which it is made, and that we shall be able to proceed, after a decision of this question, in a way that will meet the approbation of both the friends and the opponents of the proposition now before the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, if I understand the proposition of the Senator from Kansas, it is that the Senate disagree to the third section of this bill.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator does not understand me. I am willing that the Senate shall disagree to the third section of the bill provided action can be had upon House bill No. 2677, whichever way that may go.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit to the Senator from Kansas that that involves a postponement of the regular Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. INGALLS. It is entirely immaterial, so far as the question of postponement is concerned, whether this debate proceeds upon the third section of the Indian appropriation bill or upon House bill No. 2677; but, if that bill from the House is taken up and considered, then we shall reach a determination of this question that will be final, and this bill can then proceed to be considered by the Senate as reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WINDOM. I sympathize somewhat with the Senator from Kansas in his position on this question. My judgment is by no means convinced that we should pass any bill transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department; and yet I am not prepared to say how I should vote upon such a bill from the Indian Committee. I shall not, however, vote for the transfer or for the abolition of the Indian Bureau in this bill; nor can I consent, as one member of the Committee on Appropriations, to lay this bill aside for the purpose of bringing the other in and discussing it before this is acted upon. I think it would indefinitely postpone this bill. I had hoped that the discussion of this question had about closed, and I believe that if we are patient an hour or two longer we can close it and vote on the proposition. I am willing to vote against the abolition proposed by the bill and take the chances on the report of the other bill when it comes at the proper time, after being duly considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. INGALLS. It appears to me that, if a majority of the Senate favor the transfer of the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department, it is desirable that the transfer should be made in the best manner possible; that whatever action may be had, whether by bill or amendment or otherwise, should be well guarded and well considered; and therefore it appears to me that the object of the Senator from Minnesota, as well as of those who do not agree with him, would be best accomplished by considering a measure that is properly guarded and properly before the Senate. So far as the third section of this bill is concerned, I believe with him that it is an abolition of the Indian Department rather than a proper transfer of it to the Military Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why not dispose of this, then, and allow the other to come up in its regular order?

Mr. INGALLS. Simply because I apprehend it will not come up in its regular order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You can move to take it up at any time.

Mr. INGALLS. I know that, and so can any other member of the Senate; but I know that if this subject is considered by piecemeal the Indian appropriation bill will be passed and that the opportunity for considering the question will have passed by.

Mr. WINDOM. I am willing to trust the committee who have charge of that bill. I am not willing to force action on this transfer, as it will be forced if we pass the third section. I think that it should take its regular course, and I believe that the committee of the Senate will at the proper time report upon it. It can do no harm, it seems to me, to reject this third section, because if we shall after this pass the bill from the House now before the Indian Committee some of these appropriations would simply fall. Almost all of them will have to stand precisely as they are if the transfer be made, but the appropriations for the pay of officers in the Indian Bureau would simply fall for want of recipients, provided we make the transfer.

I can see no difficulty about it, and it seems to me we have wandered into a much wider range of debate than is necessary on this bill. The question is as to the propriety of this third section and as to the propriety of passing it here, and I am willing to vote upon one thing at a time. I am clearly of opinion that this third section ought to be stricken out, and I think when the Senator from Kansas turns his attention directly to the third section rather than to the general proposition, he will, as he says he does, agree with me. I suggest that the best compromise is to consider this bill on its own merits and pass it as soon as possible, and then when the committee report the other, take it up and act upon it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am too weak and ill to make the Senate hear, perhaps, anything that I shall undertake to say, but I believe that we living upon the borders have a right to a fair vote upon the question of the transfer of the Indian Bureau from the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of War.

I introduced on the 20th of December last a carefully prepared bill upon that subject and for that purpose, and that bill was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and no report has been made either pro or con upon that bill. The bill which has passed the House and which is proposed by the honorable Senator from Kansas to be taken up and voted upon as an independent proposition substantially corresponds with the bill which I then introduced and which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I am unwilling, and believe it to be a bad principle as a general rule, to vote legislation upon appropriation bills. I believe it is the fair way that the Senate should take up and consider separately the bill for this purpose as an independent proposition before the Indian appropriation bill is forced to a vote. It will certainly take no longer, and the question can be decided then upon its merits; and when it is so decided, no one can justly complain.

I trust, therefore, that the motion of the Senator from Kansas will be carried, that the House bill will be taken up and acted upon, and then the vote upon the appropriation bill can be had understandingly and in accordance with the result thus arrived at.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, in reply to the remarks just made by the Senator from Nebraska with reference to the bill introduced by him in the early stages of the session, I desire to say that the bill proposed by him was referred to a subcommittee, and that the subcommittee reported some time ago. In the mean time a House bill on the same subject came to the Senate, and was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs; that bill has also been considered by the committee, and I doubt not will finally be considered by the committee to-morrow at its meeting, and could be reported to the Senate to-morrow.

I regret exceedingly that we are met face to face in an appropriation bill with a proposition, and that a crude proposition, to transfer the control of three hundred thousand Indians, with their annuities, with the treaty stipulations binding upon the people of the United States, to the War Department by a single section in an appropriation bill, without any machinery whatever to carry out the provisions of law and of treaty with reference to the subject.

Here is a proposition prohibiting the employment of civil officers, clerks, or employés in the Indian service; declaring that hereafter all functions performed with reference to the Indians shall be performed by officers and soldiers of the Army of the United States; a proposition novel in its character; one never proposed before; one never existing upon our statute-books—a new, and strange, and novel proposition, brought in upon an appropriation bill when there are but twelve days left of the fiscal year, when all these appropriations ought to go into effect in order to carry out the treaty stipulations on our statute-book. That is the proposition we have before us. Turn to this third section; and I am not surprised that the Senator from Kansas, who is in favor of the transfer, should make a proposition at this stage of the debate to lay aside an appropriation bill, which ought to go into effect on the 1st of July, for the purpose of taking up another and a different bill, which has never been reported by a standing committee of this Senate, and ask the Senate to consider it in advance of an appropriation bill, in order that this crude proposition may be put in shape by the Senate of the United States in such a way as to make this bill effective if the service is to be transferred to the War Department.

Mr. President, I have listened to this debate during this day and this evening, especially the remarks made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] and by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. BOGY,] and one would infer that up to the organization of the Interior Department the Army of the United States had had control of Indian affairs. It never has been so since the Government of the United States has been organized. The Indians of this country have always been controlled by civil officers of the Government, and never have been controlled by officers of the Army save and except the year and a half that they were so controlled under the order of President Grant, beginning with his Administration in 1869 and ending by an act of Congress prohibiting it on the 15th day of July, 1870. No officer of the Army during any of the administrations of our Government preceding the organization of the Interior Department ever had control of the civil affairs of our Indians. They were always controlled by civil officers, and as early as 1832 an Indian Department or Bureau was organized in the War Department, with superintendents and agents and sub-agents. All the machinery which is now in existence was organized in 1832 for the control of the Indians.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator permit me a word?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask him if the Indian Bureau was not a part and parcel of the War Department from 1832 down to 1849?

Mr. ALLISON. The Indian Bureau was then a Bureau of the War Department, but every officer of that Bureau was a civil officer, giving bond as a civil officer, and no Army officer was ever detailed for civil service, except to inspect Indian goods that had been purchased for the Indian Bureau by officers civil in their character and functions and not Army officers.

Mr. MAXEY. Now I will ask the Senator to whom the superintendents of Indian affairs, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and all the agents connected with the Bureau reported, and under whose orders and authority they were?

Mr. ALLISON. As a matter of fact, they reported to the Secretary of War.

Mr. MAXEY. And were under the orders of the Secretary of War.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly, but under the direction of law. The law passed in 1834 regulating intercourse with Indian tribes stands practically on our statute-books to-day unchanged; a law civil in its character, especially defining the duties of Army officers. Let any gentleman turn to that statute of 1834, or the Revised Statutes in which it is embodied, and he will see that the Army could do nothing except what was defined by statute. They have no authority or control such as is proposed in this section. Here we do not legislate at all. We allow everything to be done by or under regulations to be made by the President of the United States and the Secretary of War.

Mr. MAXEY. The point I make is that every officer of the Indian Bureau, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the superintendents of Indian affairs, the Indian agents, were all under the control of the Secretary of War. The Army was under the control of the Secretary of War. There was a complete and perfect autonomy between the system of superintendencies and agencies and the Army, and no collusion whatever, because they were all responsible to the same common head.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, but the Senator from Texas seems to mistake entirely the point I make, and that is that the Indian Bureau was controlled by law and not by Army officers. The Secretary of War was a civil officer, as much as the head of your Bureau of Indian Affairs was a civil officer. He is recognized as a civil officer in our Government. He is a Cabinet minister. He is not an Army officer. It is true he has control of the Army in a sense, but he had no control of Indian affairs except that control which was given to him by law, and if you will examine the statute of 1834 you will see that the control of the Army over Indians was limited by law. That is the point I make.

Mr. MAXEY. I will ask the Senator if the Secretary of War did not have precisely the same control over the Indian Bureau and all its officers that he had over the Army itself? All the authority he had was authority by law.

Mr. ALLISON. By no means. He had control of the civil officers in the Indian Bureau, but he could not detail an Army officer as an agent, and he could not direct Army officers to do specific things, because the intercourse act of 1834 directed specifically what the Army could do, and they could do nothing except what was specified in the statute of 1834; and that is the law to-day.

Now, we have a novel proposition, a proposition not transferring this Indian Bureau to the War Department, a civil Department of this Government, but a proposition to turn over 300,000 Indians, some of them civilized, some of them semi-civilized, and others barbarous, to the control and direction of the Army of the United States. That is the point I make, and that is the difference. That is a novel proposition, and it is without any limitation of law, under the Army regulations, under the control of the Secretary of War, without law, and without limitation. It is the most extraordinary proposition that I have ever seen presented to the American Senate, or to any legislative body, turning over the control of more than 100,000 civilized Indians to the Army of the United States, and another 100,000, semi-civilized and in course of civilization, and another 100,000 of barbarous tribes.

I want to say right here to the Senator from Missouri, whom I know to be familiar with Indian affairs, that I was amazed at some of his statements made this evening. Does he not know that the civilized tribes known as the Five Nations in the Indian Territory, numbering 55,000 people, are, in the sense that it is important to us as a nation, to-day as civilized as we are? They are not supported by our bounty or by our charity. They live by the labor of their hands as we live by the labor of our hands, and that is the great question after all to be considered by the American people. It is an economic question. Of course we must civilize them and advance them as rapidly as we can in civilization, as we do our own people; but the great object we should have in our legislation is to make these Indians self-supporting. How can that be done? It can only be done by beginning with the ruder arts of agriculture, by teaching them how to work; and will it be claimed that a soldier of our Army is as likely or more likely to inculcate these arts of industry than the Indian agent or the civil officer of the Government? Does not my friend from Missouri know that we do not appropriate a single dollar for these 55,000 Indians in the Indian Territory known as the five civilized nations?

Mr. INGALLS. What do they have an agent for?

Mr. ALLISON. They have an agent and they would be glad to get rid of him even, but the Cherokee annuities are paid over to the Indians themselves and they are disbursed by an Indian council, and the agent of the United States has no control whatever over those funds.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If they do not need an agent and do not desire an agent, why make an appropriation for an agent?

Mr. EDMUNDS. He is the representative of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly. We pay them annuities as provided by treaty, and about the only office of the agent is to see that the goods and moneys are delivered to the Indians properly and taken care of properly. They are not bounties; they are for services. They are for land that we purchased of them and agreed to pay them for as long ago as 1832 and 1836. Now it is proposed by the third section of this bill to turn these fifty-five thousand civilized Indians over to the Army of the United States without law and without limitation; and of course an Army officer will be assigned to that duty. It is a most extraordinary proposition.

It may be true that we cannot civilize these Indian tribes. I do not say that we can; I only say that that has been the policy of the Government from the beginning, and the uniform testimony of all the men who have examined this question has been and is that if we would civilize the Indian we must not put over him an army. That is not a civilizing medium.

The Senator from Texas read something from General Sherman upon this topic. I have here the deliberate words of General Sherman uttered at a most remarkable period in the history of our Indian relations. You all remember the wars of 1864, 1865, 1866, and 1867; wars that cost the people of this country millions upon millions of dollars, arising from various circumstances connected with the emigration to the Pacific coast, and arising from the fact that we undertook to build an iron railway across the State of Nebraska and the Territories to the Pacific coast. We engaged in a war with these tribes, and after having expended several millions of dollars in a vain effort to secure peace the Congress of the United States passed a law in 1867 creating a commission, consisting of the most eminent men of our Army, including one Senator of the United States, to make treaties with the tribes who had been at war with us. That commission consisted of the then Commissioner of Indian Affairs, a democrat from the State of Tennessee; General Henderson, of Missouri, then a Senator of the United States; William T. Sherman, then Lieutenant-General and now General of our Army; William S. Harney, brevet major-general, who had spent most of his long life in fighting the Indian tribes; John B. Sanborn, a volunteer general of the Army from the State of Minnesota; Alfred H. Terry, a brigadier-general of the United States Army; S. F. Tappan, an eminent citizen; and C. C. Augur, a major-general in the United States Army. These eminent men spent a year and a half in endeavoring to secure peace with hostile Indian tribes.

Mr. MAXEY. What is the date of that communication?

Mr. ALLISON. I read the report of that commission, signed by every member of it, dated January 7, 1868.

Mr. MAXEY. One of the letters I read from, General Sherman's, is dated the 4th of February, 1876; the other the 19th of January, 1876; and in addition I will state that General Augur in this book also favors the same thing, and so does Sanborn.

Mr. ALLISON. I am aware that the other branch of this Congress addressed letters to eminent officers in our Army, who, I have no doubt, sat down without any consideration and answered them. But here is a report signed by four generals of the United States Army, and I read from that report to show what was their deliberate judgment after their return from a visit to the hostile tribes and after they had made peace with those tribes; and I shall have something to say of the character of that peace in a moment. I read from page 22 of their report:

> This brings us to consider the much-mooted question whether the Bureau should belong to the civil or military department of the Government. To determine this properly we must first know what is to be the future treatment of the Indians. If we intend to make war with them, the Bureau should go to the Secretary of War. If we intend to have peace, it should be in the civil department. In our judgment such wars are wholly unnecessary, and hoping that the Government and the country will agree with us, we cannot now advise the change. It is possible, however, that, despite our efforts to maintain peace, war may be forced on us by some tribe or tribes of Indians. In the event of such occurrence, it may be well to provide, in the revision of the intercourse laws or elsewhere, at what time the civil jurisdiction shall cease and the military jurisdiction begin.

That is the language of General Sherman, uttered in 1868, in a deliberate report to Congress, intended to exercise an influence over the deliberations of Congress upon a most vital question at that moment.

Mr. MAXEY. And eight years after that he concluded that the time had come to which he referred by the word "now;" and he declared in favor of the transfer.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I should be glad to cross-examine General Sherman upon that subject, and if General Sherman believes as those who have advocated this policy to-night believe, that it is because of the enormous expenditure of the Indian Bureau, then I will reply to General Sherman that nearly three millions—two millions and a half—of the money contained in this appropriation bill results directly and absolutely from treaties made by General Sherman and his confrères in 1867 and 1868.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to inquire if the Senator means to say that they are in accordance with the provisions of those treaties or not.

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer the Senator. They are in direct accordance with the provisions of the treaties or they inevitably result from the making of those treaties.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They are not in accordance with the provisions of those treaties directly at all, are they?

Mr. ALLISON. More than a million dollars of them are. General Sherman and his confrères made a treaty with the Sioux tribes by which they agreed to give to every male Indian over fourteen years of age a suit of clothes annually for thirty years, and to every female over fourteen years of age a suit of clothing, describing it, for thirty years; and they agreed to give to all the children of these tribes a sufficient amount to clothe them once a year for thirty years. They agreed to pay for every Indian roaming, and they all roam, $10 per annum for thirty years. They agreed to pay $20 a year for thirty years to every Indian on that reservation who would farm. If you will multiply these several sums, leaving out of account anything whatever for subsistence, and faithfully carry out that treaty with the Sioux Nation, you have involved this Government for thirty years in an annual expenditure of $1,000,000 per annum, and more. And now are we to be told that this Indian Bureau is extravagant, because in this bill we appropriate in all for 300,000 Indians a little less than $5,000,000?

General Sherman and his confrères not only made this treaty—I am not finding fault with it, but I am only answering those who charge that we are appropriating money here unjustly; I am only showing that these appropriations are made in direct accordance with treaty stipulations, and because of treaty stipulations—but in addition they agreed to subsist these Sioux tribes for four years after they went upon their reservation, and under that treaty of General Sherman there has been expended by the Government of the United States in the last six years $12,000,000; and if you will take the per capita cost of supporting these Indians under that treaty, you will find that their subsistence has cost, I think, less than ten cents per capita.

The commission, of which General Sherman was a distinguished member, made treaties not only with the Sioux but with a large number of other Indian tribes that are now included within this appropriation bill. So that what I said in the beginning is true, that these large appropriations result chiefly from the treaties made in 1867 and 1868; and I want no gentleman here to say that I am attacking those treaties. I believe they were in the main economical treaties. We had just spent nearly $30,000,000; warring with the Sioux, we had spent $19,000,000; and, as the Senator from Illinois showed to-day, nearly $50,000,000, but certainly $19,000,000, in warring with a thousand Seminoles in Florida during the year 1835 and the years that followed. This commission showed very conclusively that although they made liberal provisions for the Sioux tribes, those provisions were economical when compared with the war policy that had prevailed against them.

Mr. WINDOM. It being apparent that we cannot finish the bill to-night, the Senator from Iowa yields to me to make a motion to adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not care to occupy very much time.

The motion to adjourn was agreed to; and (at eleven o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 20, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. WIKE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

> Resolved, That the report of Hon. T. M. Morris, as commissioner appointed by the President of the United States, in the year 1869, to examine and report upon the condition of the Union Pacific Railroad, a copy of which report has been submitted to the House by the Secretary of the Interior in pursuance of a resolution of the House, be, and the same is hereby, ordered to be printed.

EXPLOSIVE ILLUMINATING OILS AND OTHER FLUIDS.

Mr. WILLARD. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee for the District of Columbia for consideration at this time, as a substitute for House bill No. 1504, a bill to prevent the sale and use of adulterated and explosive illuminating oils and other fluids in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, after which objections will be in order.

The first section of the substitute provides that no person shall adulterate, for the purpose of sale or use, or keep for sale in the District of Columbia, any coal or kerosene oil, or other fluid to be used for illuminating purposes, in such a manner as shall render them dangerous to use, nor shall any person sell or keep for sale, or knowingly use, any coal or kerosene oil, or any of the products thereof, which, by reason of being adulterated, or for any other reason, will, at a temperature of 110° Fahrenheit thermometer, emit an explosive gas which will take fire on exposing thereto or plunging therein a lighted match; and any person violating this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment in the District jail for not more than one year, or by fine not exceeding $500, or both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

The second section provides that it shall be the duty of the health officer of the board of health of the District of Columbia, upon the written application or complaint of any person, to inspect and test all oils and fluids to be used for illuminating purposes against which complaints may be made; and if such oils or fluids shall not meet the requirements herein prescribed, it shall be unlawful for the owner or vendor to sell or use such fluid for illuminating purposes, and for so doing such person shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be subject to the penalties provided in the preceding section.

The third section directs the health officer of the board of health of the District of Columbia to report all violations of the act to the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to prosecute the same in the same manner as other criminal offenses committed within the limits of the District.

The fourth section provides that the possession of such adulterated oils or fluids shall be held and taken as evidence that the same is held for sale by the person so found in possession thereof.

The fifth section provides that the act shall take effect thirty days after the date of its approval.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 3745) was received, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. WILLARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PONTON BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Commerce for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 1539) to authorize the construction of a ponton bridge across the Mississippi River from some feasible point in Buffalo County, in the State of Wisconsin, to some feasible point in Winona County, in the State of Minnesota. I desire to state that this bill receives the unanimous indorsement of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DURHAM. I hope the gentleman will not press that bill now.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let the bill be read; I think there can be no objection to it.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be lawful for the Green Bay and Minnesota Railroad Company, a corporation authorized by the laws of the State of Wisconsin, to construct a pile and ponton bridge across the Mississippi River at some feasible point in Buffalo County, in the State of Wisconsin, so as to connect with the opposite shore of the said river within the present limits of the city of Winona, in the State of Minnesota; said bridge to be built subject, except as herein modified, to all the terms, requirements, and limitations contained in the act entitled "An act to legalize and establish a ponton railway bridge across the Mississippi River at Prairie du Chien and to authorize the construction of a similar bridge at or near Clinton, Iowa," approved June 6, 1874, so far as they may be applicable thereto.

SEC. 2. That the bridge shall be constructed with one suitable ponton-draw of not less than four hundred feet in width, located over the main channel of the river: Provided, That said bridge shall not be built or commenced until the plan and specifications for its construction have been submitted to the Secretary of War for his approval, nor until he shall approve the plan and the location of said bridge; and if any change be made in the plan of construction of said bridge at any time, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and any change in the construction, or any alteration of said bridge that may be directed at any time by Congress or the Secretary of War, shall be made at the cost and expense of the owners thereof.

SEC. 3. That the said city of Winona, or by its consent and subject thereto, any citizen of said city, or any company organized for that purpose, shall have the right to construct, on such terms, conditions, and restrictions as shall be just and equitable, in connection with, and as a part of, said railroad bridge, a bridge for the passage of travelers by highway and any baggage or property by them carried or transported, and for the passage of horsemen, footmen, horses, cattle, swine, wagons, sleighs, and other vehicles, and so forth: Provided, That the said city, person, or company constructing said bridge for the passage of teams, and so forth, shall not have the right in any way to interfere with or obstruct the free use by the said railroad company of its bridge at any and all times, and shall be bound, in case of the construction of a bridge for the passage and transportation of teams, and so forth, in connection with, and as a part of, said railroad bridge, as aforesaid, to pay a just and proportionate share of the cost of the said bridge, and of the expense of the repair and maintenance of the same.

Mr. HOLMAN. The controlling power of the Secretary of War over this bridge is retained?

Mr. DUNNELL. Yes; the same as you indicated the other day.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being called for, the morning hour will now begin at twenty-eight minutes past twelve o'clock, and the business during the morning hour is the call of committees for reports of a public nature, the call resting with the Committee on the Judiciary.

DAMAGES FOR INFRINGEMENT OF PATENTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. At the expiration of the last morning hour on public-bill day the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] had called the previous question on the bill (H. R. No. 3370) to amend the statutes in relation to damages for infringement of patents, and for other purposes, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary. The previous question was not seconded, because a quorum did not vote. The question now is on seconding the call for the previous question.

Mr. EAMES. I desire to say——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order pending the call for the previous question.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Allow me to inquire of the gentleman in charge of this bill whether there is not one difficulty in regard to it——

Mr. EAMES. I propose to claim the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. LYNDE. I do not propose to yield to any one.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] whether he will not yield in order that the bill to equalize bounties of soldiers of the late war may be taken up and disposed of finally? I think we can dispose of that bill in less than half an hour.

Mr. LYNDE. This bill, if I succeed in getting the previous question ordered, will soon be disposed of.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The gentleman had better yield for the soldiers' bounty bill, with the understanding that the morning hour shall commence afterward.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin has demanded the previous question.

Mr. EAMES. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. This bill was before the House about a week ago, when it was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary and a very brief explanation of it was made by the gentleman who reported it. During the brief discussion upon the measure, which was limited to a few minutes upon each side, I attempted to get the floor for the purpose of proposing or suggesting an amendment to the gentleman having charge of the bill, who, however, declined to yield. I asked the privilege of having the amendment read, which was also declined, whereupon the question was taken by a rising vote upon seconding the demand for the previous question. Tellers were asked for, and upon the last vote then taken it appeared that there was no quorum voting. I now claim that the demand then made for the previous question was not sustained because no quorum voted, and that I am entitled to the floor. If so, I desire to propose an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The RECORD shows substantially what the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. EAMES] states. It also shows that the gentleman from Wisconsin was on the floor insisting upon the previous question; that the question on seconding the demand was put to the House, and it only failed because there was no quorum. The gentleman from Wisconsin has still the right to call up that question as unfinished business in this morning hour. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. EAMES. May I ask the Chair, very respectfully, how many times this question may be tried?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum having appeared on the previous vote, the vote will be again taken.

The question being taken on seconding the demand for the previous question, there were—ayes 83, noes 17; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LYNDE and Mr. EAMES were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 121, noes 25.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered; and under the operations thereof the amendments reported by the Committee on the Judiciary were agreed to.

The question being on ordering the bill, as amended, to be engrossed and read a third time,

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, and Mr. EAMES called for the reading of the bill as amended; and it was read.

Mr. SAMPSON. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman in charge of this bill to one fact——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order at this time.

Mr. SAMPSON. The bill is retrospective in its operation and destroys existing rights.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. EAMES. I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin to yield the floor to me for a few minutes.

Mr. LYNDE. I must insist upon the regular order.

Mr. EAMES. Will the gentleman allow me to state——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question is operating, and no debate is in order.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read a third time by its title.

Mr. OLIVER. I call for the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not engrossed. The gentleman must be aware of that.

Mr. LYNDE. Does not the demand come too late?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is in time, and has the right to call for the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. LYNDE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Was it not too late to call for the reading of the engrossed bill after this order has been passed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Immediately after the Clerk read the bill the third time by its title the gentleman from Iowa rose. The title, however, had been read.

Mr. HOLMAN. The order that the bill be engrossed and read a third time had been passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the Chair directed the Clerk to read the engrossed bill by its title, which was done; and almost immediately upon that the gentleman from Iowa rose.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would it be in order now to move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to reconsider made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] is now pending.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the further consideration of the motion to reconsider be postponed until to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal. By that time the bill will have been engrossed, and we can at once take a vote upon its passage.

The motion of Mr. SPRINGER was agreed to.

DOWER IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. LAWRENCE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with a recommendation that it pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2043) to improve the law in relation to dower in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read. It provides that the widow of any person dying shall be endowed of one full and equal third part of all the lands and tenements of which her husband was seized as an estate of inheritance at any time during the coverture; and she shall in like manner be endowed of one-third part of all the right, title, or interest, legal or equitable, that her husband, at the time of his decease, had in any lands and tenements. Dower may be assigned specifically by metes and bounds, or as of a third part of the net annual value of the rents, issues, and profits of the lands and tenements, or interest therein, in which the dower right exists.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LAWRENCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now that the bill has passed, would it not be well for the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] to explain its provisions?

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is to give dower in the District of Columbia and to extend the right of dower to equitable estates as well as legal estates.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has the gentleman considered the policy of abolishing that relic of the feudal ages?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Of course that is a different question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has passed, and debate is not in order.

LAND PATENTS.

Mr. LAWRENCE also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 844) relating to land patents, with amendments.

The bill, which was read, provides that all patents for land which have been or may be issued shall, in all actions to recover the title or possession of said land, for all purposes of any statute or law limiting the time for commencing actions, or otherwise, have effect as if issued to the party entitled thereto at the time such party was or may be authorized to make any proof of a right to such patent.

The committee recommended that the bill be amended in line 4, after the word "actions," by inserting the words "hereafter commenced," and in the sixth line by striking out the words "or otherwise."

Mr. PAGE. I should like to hear some explanation of this bill from the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LAWRENCE. This bill has been very carefully considered by the Judiciary Committee, and they have recommended one or two amendments, making it applicable to actions hereafter commenced. I will state in a few words the object of the bill.

By the law as it now stands the statute of limitations does not run against the Government. The result is that whenever a party makes an entry of land and procures his certificate of entry, if he delays for twenty, forty, or even a hundred years to take out his patent, and in the mean time sells out his equitable interest conveyed to him by the certificate of entry, the party in possession is never protected in his title by the statute of limitations. Now the object of this bill is simply to provide that whenever a party is lawfully entitled to a patent, if he delays to take it out, or if his heirs shall delay to take it out, the party in possession holding the equitable title shall have the same benefit, and the patent shall have the effect, so far as every purpose of the statute of limitations is concerned, as though it had been issued at the time the party was lawfully entitled to it. The effect of this bill will, of course, give to a party in adverse possession claiming title the benefit of the statute of limitations, no matter how his title or claim of title accrued. The bill is designed to give repose and security to parties in possession under claim of title. It is designed to cut off the great evil of permitting parties to set up a title by mere delay in procuring a patent against those who have long been in possession. It seems to me there is no objection to the bill. It has the sanction of the Judiciary Committee. I have heretofore, at an early day in the session, presented my views more fully on this bill than I propose to do now, and I refer to them for the reasons on which it rests.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LAWRENCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PARTITION OF REAL ESTATE IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. LAWRENCE also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3168) relating to partition of real estate in the District of Columbia, with amendments.

The bill, which was read, provides that the supreme court of the District of Columbia may decree a partition of any lands or tenements within said District, or any right, interest, or estate therein, either legal or equitable, on the bill or petition of any joint tenant, tenant in common, or any parcener, or any concurrent owner, whether claiming by descent or by purchase; or if it appears that the said lands or tenements, or right, interest, or estate therein, cannot be divided without loss or injury to the parties interested, the court may decree a sale thereof and a division of the money arising from such sale among the parties, according to their respective rights. The act shall apply to cases where all the parties are of full age, and to cases where all the parties are infants, and to cases where some of the parties are of full age and some infants, and to cases where some or all of the parties are non compos mentis; and also to apply to cases where any or all of the parties are non-residents; and any party, whether of full age, infant, or non compos mentis, may file a bill under the act, an infant by his guardian or prochein ami, and a non compos by his committee or trustee.

The committee recommended an amendment in the sixth line, after the word "equitable," to insert the words "including contingent remainders;" and also to add to the section the following:

> The court shall have power to appoint guardians ad litem, or trustees for absent parties, or to represent contingent interests, and to require bonds and accounts from such trustees when equity shall require. And in all cases of sales in partition proceedings, the court shall require an appraisement and re-appraisement from time to time if necessary by appraisers appointed and duly authorized by the court; and no sale shall be made for less than two-thirds of the appraised value of the land or interests therein.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LAWRENCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill, as amended, was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FEMALE ATTORNEYS.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back to the House a bill (H. R. No. 2622) relating to the admission of persons in the courts to practice law, which I ask be read.

The bill, which was read, provides that every person shall be entitled to be admitted in every court of the United States to practice as an attorney and counselor at law and solicitor in chancery who may be properly qualified according to law, without regard to sex.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report that back with an adverse report. I am also authorized by the committee to ask a vote of the House on it. Members will see its purpose. It simply provides that all persons shall be entitled to practice as attorneys and counselors at law in the courts of the United States, without regard to sex. I demand the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the bill will be recommitted, so the Committee on the Judiciary can report more definitely on this subject.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is not worth while to recommit. The whole merits are before the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. It ought to be more carefully examined.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It has been examined. Let us pass the bill. That is what ought to be done.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to lay on the table is pending, and on that the previous question has been demanded.

The question being taken, the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now I make the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to lay on the table is still pending.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was laid on the table.

CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURT TERMS IN IOWA.

Mr. McCRARY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3746) relating to the terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States in and for the district of Iowa; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read in full.

Mr. HOLMAN. If I understand correctly the provisions of the bill from its reading, it does not provide for an additional clerk, but only for a deputy clerk and deputy marshal. Am I correct?

Mr. McCRARY. Yes, sir.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCRARY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SERVICE OF PROCESS IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. McCRARY also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3747) to secure service of process in United States courts in certain cases; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides that wherever service of process in any cause at law or in equity heretofore commenced or that may be hereafter commenced in any of the courts of the United States against any corporation or body corporate cannot be made by reason of the fact that the officer upon whom, by the law of such State, service is to be made has resigned, or cannot be found, or by reason of there being no such officer, the service may be made upon any officer or agent of the corporation or body corporate.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCRARY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT-COURT COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. McCRARY also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 865) to provide for the appointment of additional circuit-court commissioners and to prevent oppression.

The bill, which was read, provides that hereafter it shall be the duty of each of the circuit courts of the United States to appoint at least one commissioner of the circuit court in each county and parish in the circuit of such court, who shall exercise the powers which are or may be expressly conferred by law upon commissioners of circuit courts; and all persons arrested for violation of any of the laws of the United States, and entitled to a preliminary hearing upon said charge, shall be entitled to have such hearing before the nearest commissioner.

Mr. McCRARY. A word of explanation may be proper in reference to this bill. Gentlemen are aware that informations for violation of the revenue laws of the United States and other criminal matters are filed before the commissioners of the circuit courts, and parties who are charged with these offenses are brought before commissioners for examination. In many of the circuits there are but a few of these commissioners, and parties are often required to go a long distance to reach the place where an examination can be had. This has been found to be very oppressive, and the object of this bill is to remove that evil and prevent that oppression.

The bill provides that in each county and parish in the circuit of each circuit court a commissioner of the circuit court shall be appointed, and the party accused shall be brought before the nearest commissioner for examination. The House will see that this will relieve the penal statutes of much of the odium that now attaches to them. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCRARY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, in writing, was communicated to the House by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Private Secretary, who also informed the House that the President had approved bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 2434) to amend section 5271 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to extradition;

An act (H. R. No. 3573) to amend an act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, approved December 23, 1874, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 2134) making appropriations for fortifications and for other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 2140) establishing Cheboygan, in the State of Michigan, a port of delivery; and

An act (H. R. No. 2135) relating to the execution of custom-house bonds.

JUDGMENT LIENS.

Mr. McCRARY also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3150) in relation to judgment liens.

The bill was read. It provides that, except as provided in a subsequent section, judgments and decrees for the payment of money rendered by the courts of the United States within any State shall be liens upon the real estate of the judgment-debtors within the district in all cases where by the law of such State the judgments of State courts are or may be liens upon real estate.

The second section provides that in any State where by the laws thereof any form of registration, docketing, filing, or recording is or shall be required to constitute any judgments of the courts of such State liens upon real estate, and where such State shall provide by law for registering, docketing, filing, or recording the judgments of courts of the United States upon the same terms and in the same manner as the judgments of State courts, such State laws shall apply to and govern the liens of judgments of United States courts to the same extent and in the same manner as they apply to and govern the liens of judgments of the State courts.

The third section provides that this act shall not apply to judgments heretofore rendered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the bill will be reported again.

Mr. McCRARY. Before the Clerk reads the bill I will make a brief explanation. The only purpose of the bill is to apply to judgments of the Federal courts of the several States precisely the same rule as to liens that is applied by the State laws. The statute of the United States as it now stands was intended to accomplish that purpose, but it does not do so under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, for this reason: In many of the States the judgment of the State courts is a lien only within the county where it is rendered, or in a county where a transcript of the judgment has been filed or registered under the State law. Where such laws as these prevail the Supreme Court has decided that judgment of the Federal courts are liens throughout the entire district, although the judgments of the State courts are liens only within the counties where they are rendered. It is to meet that difficulty that we reported this bill, and provide that in all cases where the State laws provide any mode of registration for the purpose of making a judgment a lien in counties other than that where it was actually rendered that mode shall be followed as to Federal judgments which are to be registered according to the State law; provided, of course, that the State shall make provision for the registration of the judgments of the Federal courts on the same terms and manner as the judgments of the State courts are registered. The reason of this is that it is not competent for Congress to direct that a State officer shall be required to register judgments of the jourts of the United States. There is a printed report which accompanies this bill which I ask to have printed with my remarks.

The report is as follows:

The only law of the United States having any relation to the question of the nature or extent of the liens created by judgments rendered in the courts of the United States, is that embodied in sections 916 and 967 of the Revised Statutes, as follows:

"SEC. 916. The party recovering a judgment in any common law cause in any circuit or district court shall be entitled to similar remedies upon the same, by execution or otherwise, to reach the property of the judgment-debtor as are now provided in like causes by the laws of the State in which such court is held, or by any such laws hereafter enacted, which may be adopted by general rules of such circuit or district court; and such courts may, from time to time, adopt such State laws as may hereafter be in force in such State in relation to remedies upon judgments as aforesaid by execution or otherwise."

"SEC. 967. Judgments and decrees rendered in a circuit or district court within any State shall cease to be liens on real estate or chattels real in the same manner and at like periods as judgments and decrees of the courts of such State cease by law to be liens thereon."

It has been repeatedly held by the Supreme Court that judgments in the circuit and district courts are liens on the lands of the debtor in all cases and under like circumstances as when rendered in State courts. (Freeman on Judgments, section 404; Ward vs. Chamberlain, 2 Black, 430; Baker vs. Martin, 12 Wallace, 158; Riggs vs. Johnson Co., 6 Wallace, 191.)

In many of the States a judgment rendered in a State court is a lien upon land only within the county in which it is rendered, and can be made a lien upon land situated in other counties only by filing in such counties a transcript of the judgment or having the same recorded or registered therein. The question has arisen in several of the States where these laws were in force, whether a judgment of a Federal court in such States should be held a lien only in the county where rendered until recorded elsewhere, or whether such judgment, from the time of its rendition, should be held a lien upon all the land of the defendant situated within the jurisdiction, i. e., within the judicial district. It was contended that the acts of Congress above quoted were intended to give to the judgments of the Federal courts precisely the same force and effect as liens as is given to the judgments of State courts by State laws. But in Messengill et al. vs. Downs, 7 Howard, 760, the Supreme Court held that "in those States where the judgment or the execution of a State court creates a lien only within the county in which the judgment is entered, it has not been doubted that a similar proceeding in the circuit court of the United States would create a lien to the extent of its jurisdiction." And a similar rule has been followed in the State courts. (Freeman on Judgments, section 405; United States vs. Duncan, 12 Illinois, 523; Trapnell vs. Richardson, 13 Arkansas, 543; Sellers vs. Corwin, 5 Ohio, 398; and in the United States circuit court, Doe vs. Jones, 2 McLean, 73.)

The result is that in many of the States judgments of the Federal courts are liens upon the lands of the debtor throughout the State, without being filed or recorded elsewhere than in the place where rendered, while judgments of the highest courts of the State are liens only within the county where they are rendered or recorded.

It is deemed proper to place the judgments of the State and Federal courts upon precisely the same footing in all these States where the same provisions are made by statute for filing, registering, or recording judgments rendered by both State and Federal courts.

And for this purpose your committee report the accompanying substitute for said bill, and recommend its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the call for the rereading of the bill.

I am entirely satisfied that it is an excellent measure and one which corrects an error which has long existed.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Does the bill make provision for the redemption of sales made upon executions issued from the Federal courts by virtue of executions from the State courts?

Mr. McCRARY. I will say to the gentleman that this bill does not touch the subject of redemption at all; but there is another bill before the Committee on the Judiciary, which I think has been agreed on by the committee, which deals with that question.

The bill was passed.

Mr. McCRARY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REDEMPTION OF LANDS.

Mr. CAULFIELD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3408, a bill (H. R. No. 3748) fixing the time of redemption for lands sold by decrees and judgments in the chancery and Federal courts; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that whenever real estate shall be sold under judgments or decrees in any court of the United States in civil causes, whether such causes be suits at law or suits in equity, the same right and period shall be allowed for redemption from such sale of such real estate as is allowed by the statutes of the State within which such real estate is situated, and the practice, forms, and modes of proceeding to effect such redemption shall conform as near as may be to the practice, forms, and modes of proceeding existing at the time in like cases in the courts of record of the State in which such real estate is situated.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I would be glad to ask the gentleman who reports this bill a question.

Mr. CAULFIELD. What is it?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. It is if it would not be practicable and also wise to so amend the bill as to allow a redemption from a sale upon an execution issued from a Federal court by virtue of an execution from a State court? In listening to the reading of the bill it occurred to me that it did not cover that kind of cases.

Mr. CAULFIELD. The object of the bill is simply to allow the same period for redemption under sales by judgment and decree of the courts of the United States as is allowed by judgments and decrees of the State courts.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I understand that; but my question is this: Where real estate is sold by virtue of executions issued from the Federal courts there is a redemption either by virtue of law or decree in chancery. As I recollect, there is no provision by which a judgment creditor in a State court can redeem from that sale, so that a judgment creditor who cannot obtain status in the Federal courts loses the right of redemption. Does the bill meet that point?

Mr. CAULFIELD. I think the bill meets that point.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Do you think that it authorizes a judgment creditor in a State court to redeem from a sale under the judgment of a Federal court?

Mr. CAULFIELD. O, I am not prepared to say that. I could not accept of any amendment to the bill, as this is a report from a committee, but the gentleman can offer an amendment.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. From my experience in practicing law, it occurs to me that such an amendment should be made or such a bill passed that will cure that defect.

Mr. CAULFIELD. That has not occurred to me, and I think the gentleman had better let this bill pass and not object to it on that account.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Very well.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CAULFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TESTIMONY OF PERSONS CHARGED WITH CRIME.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 396) to allow all persons charged with the commission of crimes or offenses, when on trial in any and all the Federal courts, to be competent witnesses.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in the trial of all indictments, complaints, and other proceedings against persons charged with the commission of crimes or offenses, and in all proceedings in the nature of criminal proceedings in any and all the Federal courts, and before any and all Federal officers and persons acting judicially, the person so charged with any crime or offense, when on trial or examination, shall, at his own request, but not otherwise, be deemed a competent witness; but, if the accused shall neglect or refuse to avail himself of his right to testify, it shall not raise any presumption of guilt, nor shall the circumstance be referred to by any attorney prosecuting the case, nor shall the same be considered by the court or jury before whom the trial takes place.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time; and upon a division there were—ayes 79, noes 37.

Mr. YOUNG. No quorum has voted, and I call for a further count.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. FRYE and Mr. YOUNG were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 96, noes 27; no quorum voting.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RICE and Mr. HOLMAN. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has.

Mr. RICE. I desire to call up——

Mr. COOK. I wish to call up the special order for to-day.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I rise to make a report from a committee authorized to report at any time.

WAGON-ROAD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report on a proposed wagon-road between Gila River and Camp Apache; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

INTERNATIONAL PENITENTIARY CONGRESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (at the request of Speaker KERR) laid before the House the memorial of Hon. Horatio Seymour, of New York, asking certain supplementary legislation to explain and perfect the appropriation made last year to meet the expenses of the United States commissioner to the international penitentiary congress; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PAY AND BOUNTY OF COLORED SOLDIERS, ETC.

Mr. DOUGLAS, from the Select Committee on the Freedman's Bank, reported a preamble and joint resolution (H. R. No. 128) in relation to the payment of moneys due colored soldiers, sailors, or marines, their heirs and representatives; which was read a first and second time.

The preamble of the joint resolution states that it appears from a communication of the Secretary of War to the House of Representatives, bearing date June 7, 1876, that a certain provision made by joint resolution of the two Houses of Congress approved March 29, 1867, for the payment of moneys due colored soldiers, sailors, and marines, their heirs and representatives, has in part been defeated of its purpose by a fraudulent contrivance of the late Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, whereby many such soldiers, sailors, and marines have been prevented from receiving payment of their just claims in the premises; that from the same communication it further appears that settlements covering those delinquent claims have been had with the Second Auditor of the Treasury by General O. O. Howard, late commissioner, and G. W. Balloch, late chief disbursing officer of the said Bureau, in which fraudulent vouchers and other false evidence of payments were filed and used by the said officers, whereby they obtained improper credits for money alleged to have been paid out by them to the said soldiers, sailors, and marines so defrauded as aforesaid, and procured the making up of records of said settlement in the office of the said Second Auditor which wrongfully disclose upon their face the full payment of said delinquent claims; and that to remedy the evil thus shown to exist further legislation is required.

The first section of the joint resolution authorizes and directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the claims for pay, bounty, prize money, or other moneys due to colored soldiers, sailors, or marines, or their legal representatives, in cases in which, upon proper investigation by the War Department, it shall be established that they have failed to receive payment upon settlements heretofore made, and in which vouchers purporting to represent actual payments have been filed with the accounting officers of the Treasury by the disbursing officers of the late Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands.

The second section provides that the investigation for the purpose of determining the fact as to the non-receipt by any claimant of the money purporting by vouchers filed with the accounting officers of the Treasury to have been paid to him or her shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of War; and in each and every case in which the investigation shall prove to his satisfaction that the claimant or claimants have not in fact received payment of their claims, he shall so report to the accounting officer of the Treasury, who will thereupon settle the claim or claims to which such report by the Secretary of War shall pertain.

The third section provides that said settlements shall be made in accordance with existing laws governing the original settlement of such claims, and shall be chargeable against the same appropriation as were the original settlements.

The fourth section provides that nothing herein contained shall be construed as relieving the Commissioner of the late Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, or the officers or agents acting under him, of any responsibility or accountability which under existing laws or regulations attaches to him or them in connection with any claim to which this law has reference.

The fifth section provides that such expenses as may be necessitated by the investigation hereinbefore provided shall be defrayed by the Secretary of War from the appropriation for the collection and payment of bounties, &c., for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877.

The sixth section provides that the investigation herein ordered shall include a searching and thorough inquiry into the official conduct of any and of all persons charged by law with any duty in connection with the payment of the aforesaid claims, and report thereof shall be made through the Secretary of the Treasury to the Attorney-General, who shall thereupon direct such proper legal proceedings to be instituted against any one or more of said persons as in his judgment said report may show to be necessary to vindicate public justice and to prevent loss to the Government.

Mr. KASSON. If it is in order to make this report at any time, I make the point of order that this joint resolution must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, as it involves expenditures of appropriations.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The gentleman is mistaken; it does not appropriate any money at all.

Mr. KASSON. It involves an expenditure of money appropriated.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It involves an expenditure of money already appropriated for paying bounties to colored soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman's claim is that money has already been paid to certain parties under vouchers; and this joint resolution requires the payment again to parties, and also the payment of the expenses of an investigation. It is directly within the rule.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will state that the correspondence between the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury shows that the accounts were settled and the money passed over to the Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau for the purpose of paying these men, but that in fact it never was paid. This resolution, which was draughted at the War Department, sent to this House, and then referred to the committee of which I am chairman, proposes that these accounts, wherever it appears that credit has been given upon false vouchers, shall be resettled and charged against the appropriations heretofore made for this purpose.

Mr. KASSON. Do I understand the gentleman to say that no money has already been paid upon these claims to anybody?

Mr. DOUGLAS. O, yes; it was paid over to the Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau, but not to the parties entitled to it.

Mr. KASSON. Then it is clear that there must be another payment. I will say to the honorable gentleman that one reason for making my point, which I think he will appreciate, is that the evidence in this case has not been printed and the resolution embraces a recital of the charge (resting, I suppose, upon the evidence) that all this happened by the fault and connivance of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Refugees, &c. The House of course must desire to hear the evidence before it can with propriety adopt the resolution.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If the gentleman had not been so prompt in making his point of order, I had intended to state to the House that the preamble to the resolution, which was draughted by order of the committee, is designed to be only an epitome of the report as it came from the Secretary of War, embracing letters which have passed between that officer and the Secretary of the Treasury upon this subject, and which embody all the facts.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman is aware that it was necessary to make the point of order promptly or it would have been considered as waived.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will decide the point of order. It is very evident, in view of the provisions of section 5 of this resolution, that the point of order is well taken, in accordance with frequent decisions in this House. That section provides that—

> Such expenses as may be necessitated by the investigation hereinbefore provided shall be defrayed by the Secretary of War from the appropriation for the collection and payment of bounties, &c., for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield to the decision of the Chair, and move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this resolution.

Mr. KASSON. I suggest to the gentleman that he allow the resolution and evidence to be printed before we enter upon the consideration of the subject. We do not know what expenditure of money will be called for by the resolution, nor are we acquainted with the evidence upon which the proposition rests. I think gentlemen on all sides would prefer to see the resolution in print before it is acted upon.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave to make a suggestion to the gentleman having charge of this matter.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very certain that if the resolution goes upon the table, it will never be reached. There is evidence enough to show that $64,000 is now due to these people, and that they ought to have it.

Mr. HOAR. This resolution embraces an assertion of grossly fraudulent conduct which is charged upon the distinguished major-general of the Army who gave his right arm in the service of his country. This House took pains the other day to remove from a member of the House on the opposite side of the Chamber a censure which affected his personal honor, the minority of the House vying with his political friends in their desire to do that gentleman the most ample and abundant justice. Now I ask the majority of this House whether they think it fair to adopt this resolution in regard to General Howard without our having before us in print the evidence on which it is based?

Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DOUGLAS] has the right to report on this subject at any time, I suggest that the resolution be printed for consideration hereafter.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I propose to retain my privilege by moving that the resolution and accompanying correspondence referred to the Committee on Freedmen's Affairs be printed and recommitted; and then I enter a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, this report will be ordered to be printed and recommitted, and the gentleman's motion to reconsider will be entered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KASSON. By this proceeding my point of order that this proposition must go to the Committee of the Whole is not waived.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order was sustained by the Chair.

Mr. DOUGLAS. When I report the resolution again, it can be referred to the Committee of the Whole if necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot tell in what form the resolution may be when it is brought back. In its present form, the Chair has decided the point of order well taken.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. When a motion is made to refer a proposition to different committees, the Committee of the Whole takes precedence of a standing committee. Hence if the majority desire to send this to the Committee of the Whole they may do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a matter to be hereafter determined.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. My colleague [Mr. KASSON] has raised the point that this must go to the Committee of the Whole because it involves an appropriation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The understanding of the Chair was that the point of order being reserved, the resolution would be printed and recommitted by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have no objection to that.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order of business, which I believe to be a bill (H. R. No. 58) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. COOK.]

Mr. COOK. I move that the House now proceed to the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 58) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union, which was made the special order for Thursday, March 23, after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, to the exclusion of all other orders, excepting business of the Committees on Appropriations and Ways and Means. It was postponed to different times until May 17, when the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the consideration of the bill, and it was made the special order for Tuesday, May 23, after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, not to interfere with the regular appropriation bills.

Mr. LORD. I raise the question of consideration, and move that the House proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2865) for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award.

That bill, I believe, takes precedence at this time.

Mr. RICE. I also raise the question of consideration, and move the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2803) to provide that all pensions on account of death, wounds received, or disease contracted in the service of the United States since March 4, 1861, which have been granted, or which shall hereafter be granted, on application filed previous to January 1, 1880, shall commence from the date of death or discharge, and for the payment of the arrears of pension.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question will be first put on the bills which have been made special orders in the House before the question of consideration is put on the bills which have been made special orders in the Committee of the Whole, as that has been the uniform custom.

Mr. JENKS. That is this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. The bill in regard to the Geneva award was made a special order for the 29th of March.

Mr. WILLIS. And from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

Mr. HOLMAN. And from day to day thereafter until disposed of, not to interfere with the general appropriation bills; but the bill to equalize the bounties of soldiers was made the special order for Thursday, March 23, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. The Geneva award bill has been up for a long time and is now the unfinished business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will take the sense of the House.

Mr. BANNING. I would like to say a word. I would like, Mr. Speaker, to make an appeal to the gentleman from New York not to press his motion as this time. We gave way to him the other day. We agreed that the House bill (H. R. No. 58) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union should be withheld until the gentleman from New York might take up for consideration the Geneva-award bill. He has had that bill up twice since, and I ask him to give way now and let us take up the bill to equalize the soldiers' bounties. It is an important bill, and ought to be considered. I hope the gentleman from New York will not press his motion as against the motion made by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. THORNBURGH. The Geneva-award bill is one in which only a few insurance companies are interested, while in the bill to equalize the bounties of soldiers half a million of soldiers are interested.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think the bill to equalize the bounties of soldiers will take up the time of the House to exceed an hour and a half. When the gentleman from Tennessee has been heard, I have no doubt the previous question will then be demanded by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. COOK.]

Mr. LORD. I am willing to give way for an hour and a half.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman will not yield the floor. Let us go on and finish the Geneva-award bill. It has now been pending for ten days.

Mr. LORD. I will yield an hour and a half for the soldiers' bounty bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COOK] reported from the Committee on Military Affairs March 11 the bill (H. R. No. 58) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union, and it was not until the 16th of March that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] reported from the Committee on the Judiciary the bill (H. R. No. 2685) for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award, the latter being five days afterward, and the Chair is bound to put the question first on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COOK. The gentleman from New York has yielded to me for an hour and a half.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question then recurs first on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, to proceed with the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 58) to equalize the bounties of the soldiers who served in the late war for the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report a bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the bill be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now give notice that immediately after the disposal of the pending question I will move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of taking up that bill, and to-morrow I shall ask the House to proceed to its consideration by sections under the five-minute rule.

SOLDIERS' BOUNTIES.

Mr. BANNING. I present the petition of 1,060 soldiers, just received this morning, which is a petition, in addition to many thousands received before, for the passage of the bill to equalize the bounties of soldiers now before the House for action. I move that it be printed in the RECORD without the names.

The motion was agreed to; and the petition is as follows:

We, the undersigned, president and secretary respectively of the Soldiers and Sailors' National Beneficial Association of the United States, hereby certify that the foregoing is a correct list of names of members of the said association, and that we are authorized and empowered to present them as petitioners for the passage of a bill for the equalization of bounties to the soldiers and sailors of the late war.

D. W. BLISS,
President Soldiers and Sailors' Beneficial Association.

JAS. B. CARTER,
Corresponding Secretary.

ISSUE OF ARMS.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 129) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue arms; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BOUNTIES TO SOLDIERS.

The House, pursuant to order, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 58) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union, reported by Mr. COOK from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. THORNBURGH] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I had the honor, Mr. Speaker, early in this session to introduce this bill, and I have labored assiduously to bring it before the House for its action. After so many delays I am glad to know that we will soon reach a vote and ascertain whether we can pass the bill.

IMPARTIAL JUSTICE TO OUR SOLDIERS—EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

"The pure and impartial administration of justice is perhaps the firmest bond to secure a cheerful submission of the people and to engage their affections to government." More than a hundred years have passed since these memorable words awakened a responsive echo in the hearts of the English people, and if all else written by the distinguished author, whose identity is still shrouded in mystery, had perished, this sentence, blending divine wisdom with human justice, would entitle the name of Junius to the reverential respect of all who love impartial justice and who strive to infuse its spirit into the laws of our free government.

More than ten years have elapsed since the armies of the Republic were disbanded and the roar and confusion of battle gave place to the music of peaceful industry. The nation was thankful when the last shot was fired, and I doubt not the civilized world rejoiced that brethren had ceased to war against each other, and that the unity and integrity of the American Republic were to continue unimpaired under a common flag.

If there are any living to-day who doubted the wisdom of that patriotic uprising which signalized the breaking out of the war or who doubted the ability of the Government to preserve in peace what it had won in battle, time and experience must have long since dispelled their doubts and conviced them that the sudden uprising of the people and that sublime devotion which impelled them to heroic sacrifices through four years of bloody war were but reflections of the divine will exerting itself in defense of a nation that was to endure as an example of Christian civilization.

Time has re-united the North and the South in bonds of mutual interest. True, there are still existing traces of that bitter antagonism which accompanied the rebellion, but they are gradually disappearing and I trust that before the close of another decade they will be gone forever. Strong prejudices die slowly, but die they must before the firm administration of impartial justice. Ten years have rebuilt what four years of madness had destroyed. States that emerged from a fruitless war broken and exhausted have recovered their vigor and strength and are daily growing in wealth and prosperity. The abolition of slavery which at first appeared a misfortune has become transformed into a blessing, and under the magical touch of free labor the South has commenced an industrial career which if wisely guided will eventually restore to her people not only her lost influence but the wealth which perished in her vain effort to establish a slave confederacy. While I believe that it will require a generation to extinguish altogether the resentments that are borne in the hearts of the few I confidently predict that the great masses of the people in the Southern States will be converted through the logic of events to believe that what at first appeared their loss was in reality their gain, and that the extinction of slavery was the removal of the incubus which in time would have crushed out their manhood and destroyed their existence. When this time comes—and the signs of the times indicate that it is not far distant—justice will be done to the brave men who made the change possible and to the great party of freedom that inspired and supported them in their heroic action.

To the soldiers of the Union we are indebted for whatever we are as a nation to-day. They stood the living bulwark around the temple of liberty. Statesmen may be entitled to honors; those who gave freely of their means, to praise; but the laurel-wreath belongs to the soldier, and with it should go some substantial evidence of the nation's gratitude.

In view of our national indebtedness to the soldiers who stood true to the Government in its hour of peril, may we not ask, Has the nation given this substantial expression of its gratitude by a full and complete measure of justice, so equitable in its character as to distribute equally among those who bore the burdens of the war the rewards of peace? In other words, has the administration of justice toward our soldiers been so pure and impartial as to command their cheerful submission and awaken their affection for the Government they saved?

Mr. LAWRENCE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. THORNBURGH. Certainly.

Mr. LAWRENCE. This bill gives the soldiers eight and one-third dollars per month. Is that inclusive of what they have already received?

Mr. THORNBURGH. No, sir. It is exclusive of what they have already received.

Mr. LAWRENCE. That is right. It is as it should be.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I am aware that the nation has given freely of its means and rewarded the soldiers who served it more bountifully than any other nation on the face of the earth; yet I feel that our bounty laws, while extending blessings, have lacked in the spirit of equity, and have thus failed to extend to many faithful and deserving soldiers and their families that exact justice which a grateful nation should be willing to give.

This question of equalizing the bounties is not a new one. Nearly every session since the close of the war it has been brought to the attention of Congress, and from time to time has been earnestly urged by those who felt that it was the only measure that could extend equal justice to the soldiers who served in the late war and do away forever with the special legislation which is continually being asked for to provide for meritorious cases which had been overlooked in previous bills. The necessity and justice of this measure have been recognized on all hands, and it appears to have received the cordial support of both parties. In fact never was a measure so popular and yet so long delayed. Both Houses have agreed to every material feature, and by a mere technicality it failed to become a law at the last session. State legislatures have indorsed it, leaders of both parties have advocated it. Conventions and popular assemblies have urged its passage, and tens of thousands of our citizens who are enjoying the fruits of the service to be paid for have united in petitioning Congress to grant this measure as one of justice and equity.

Why has it been delayed? I answer, either through the insincerity of those who profess to believe in it or through a misconception of the amount of money required to meet it. I prefer to accept the latter reason as the cause, for a false idea of economy is more commonly found than a deceptive character such as the first would imply.

I shall therefore present to the House, first, the justice of the measure and then an estimate of what it will cost. If its justice can be established—and it appears to be already conceded—the question of cost becomes a matter of secondary consideration, for neither individuals nor nations have the right to repudiate a just debt because the sum required to cancel it appears too large.

THE PRINCIPAL BOUNTY LAWS.

In order to present in the most forcible light the necessity of this equalization bill, I shall review briefly the bounty laws already in existence and submit a few practical illustrations of the injustice which accompanies their application. Although we have upon our statute-books not less than sixty laws that refer to bounty, the bulk of the money appropriated has been expended under about six or seven of this number. The principal bounty laws, then, may be referred to as follows: Act of July 22, 1861; act of March 3, 1863; joint resolution of January 13, 1864; act of July 4, 1864; act of July 28, 1866, and act of April 22, 1872. The remaining fifty-four laws may be regarded as amendatory of the ones named or inoperative in their practical application.

On the 3d of May, 1861, President Lincoln issued his proclamation, calling into service 42,034 volunteers to serve for three years, unless sooner discharged. Under this proclamation General Order No. 15, dated May 4, 1861, was issued by the War Department, containing certain regulations for the organization of the troops called for, and certain distinct pledges to the soldiers. One of these pledges related to the payment of bounty. After specifying the rates to be paid for forage and travel pay while in actual service, the following language was used: "And, when honorably discharged, an allowance at the same rate from the place of his discharge to his home, and, in addition thereto, the sum of $100." Here was a distinct pledge made by the Government that $100 should be paid to the soldier when "honorably discharged." There was no other condition exacted, except that the enlistment should be for three years, and the discharge—whether caused by wounds or disease—an honorable one. How was this pledge kept? It was broken and utterly repudiated within three months. Under a decision of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury this pledge, which the soldiers had accepted in good faith, was openly violated in the name of the law, and all enlistments under the President's proclamation of May 3, 1861, were held to be governed by the provisions of the act of July 22, 1861. Here was a great injustice. Those who enlisted for three years and were promised $100 when honorably discharged were told that this honorable discharge must be after two years' service in order to entitle them to the one-hundred-dollar bounty. Yet this injustice, this violation of a sacred pledge, was allowed to continue nearly eleven years before the wrong done was righted by an act of Congress.

In March, 1870, the Supreme Court decided, on a test case brought before it, that the act of July 22, 1861, so far as it related to certain conditions requisite for the payment of bounty, did not apply to soldiers who enlisted for three years prior to its enactment. It was thought that this judicial opinion would govern the accounting officers in future settlements. But, unfortunately, a new and unexpected complication arose. The President's proclamation called for 42,034 men, whereas over 80,000 volunteers had been accepted under the call. They were needed; but the bounty had been pledged to only half the number, and the perplexing question arose who of the 80,000 were legally entitled to it. Thus it remained until Congress solved the problem by act of April 22, 1872, granting $100 bounty, based on honorable discharge, to all soldiers who had enlisted prior to July 22, 1861, and who were mustered in prior to August 6, 1861, provided they had not been promoted or received for the same service the $100 allowed under act of July 22, 1861. It is due to Congress and to the men who represented a patriotic constituency on this floor to say that a remedy was found for this wrong done the soldiers as soon as its existence was brought to their attention. Permit me to express the hope that the inequalities of the present laws and regulations which this bill proposes to heal may be as promptly corrected by this Congress as the injustice which I have referred to was by our predecessors.

The act of July 22, 1861, gave $100 bounty to all volunteers for two and three years enlisting between April 12, 1861, and December 24, 1863. After July 5, 1862, $25 of this bounty was paid in advance; the balance at end of term. Under March 3, 1863, a soldier discharged on account of wounds received in the line of duty was entitled to the full amount of bounty promised at time of enlistment. The act of March 3, 1865, and joint resolution April 12, 1866, are simply amendatory of the first named. The recruit or large bounty of $300, also the veteran bounty of $400, was legalized by joint resolution December 23, 1863, January 13, 1864, and March 3, 1864. Veteran volunteers were those who had previously served at least nine months and who had re-enlisted for three years. All others were considered and paid as recruits. There were exceptions to these two classes, arbitrary in their nature, and evidently made to suit the exigencies of the times. Out of these exceptions have grown many well-grounded complaints and hardships that fall little short of injustice. For instance, recruits enlisting in old organizations, or those already in the field, were paid $300 bounty subsequent to October 24, 1863, while those who joined new organizations at the same time received only $100, recruits to new organizations not being entitled to $300 until December 24, 1863. Then, again, there were special exceptions even among the class of exceptions named, applying to certain organizations in certain States, governed by no particular system, but purely arbitrary in their character. To even refer to these, except to note their existence, would lead to even greater confusion in trying to comprehend a question already too complex in its details.

Recruit and veteran bounty was paid to volunteers enlisting between the dates given, October 24 and December 24, 1863, and March 31, 1864. From this date to July 18, 1864, volunteers were allowed only $100 bounty. The act of July 4, 1864, provided again for the payment of large bounties, but the manner of payment was changed. This act was intended to encourage enlistment for one, two, and three years, a specified bounty being provided for each term. Thus the volunteer for one year was given one hundred, for two years two hundred, and for three years three hundred; and this plan is really the basis of this bill, giving $8.33⅓ each month. This bounty was to be paid in three equal installments, one-third on enlistment, one-third on expiration of half the service, the remaining one-third at the end of the term. Under the operations of this law and the draft which followed our armies were sufficiently recruited to assume the aggressive, and the result which followed in the spring of 1865 was the triumph of the Union forces, the complete subjugation of the confederate armies, and the vindication—let us hope for all time—of free government and the old flag which has waved over it for a century.

HARDSHIPS GROWING OUT OF THE PRESENT LAWS.

With the close of the war came universal rejoicing, tempered with the grief of a nation over the tragic death of its immortal leader, Abraham Lincoln. The people everywhere throughout the loyal States welcomed with open arms the bronzed veterans as they returned from the field to lay aside the trappings of the soldier, to enjoy, after the hardships of the camp, the sweet blessings of home.

The nation felt grateful, and justice was born of its gratitude. Homes for the disabled were provided; asylums where the worn-out and shattered could breathe out their lives in peace were established by private and public contributions; organizations vied with each other in their tender care for the soldier and those who depended upon his support; and Congress, catching the spirit of the people, hastened to equalize in a measure the burdens which had rested upon the shoulders of our brave deliverers. Out of this feeling of gratitude came the additional bounty act of July 28, 1866, accepted at the time as a compromise for a measure of equalization similar to the one now under consideration. It gave to each soldier who had enlisted into the Army of the United States after the 19th day of April, 1861, for a period not less than three years, who had been honorably discharged, either on account of wounds or by the expiration of his term, or, if dead, to his widow, minor children, or parents, the sum of $100 bounty, providing he had received or was entitled to receive from the United States $100, and no more. To those who had enlisted for two years, under like conditions, $50 were to be paid.

This act was a noble offering, and, though it fell short of exact justice, it was hailed by tens of thousands as the evidence of a grateful appreciation of the services of our soldiers that would eventually lead to the adoption of a measure that would be both just and equitable. From time to time this act has been extended and amended, so as to provide for certain classes of meritorious cases, yet, despite its liberal provisions, the failure to incorporate in it an equitable principle of distribution has made it of no benefit to thousands of volunteers who performed heroic service in their country's defense, and yet have never received a dollar of its bounty.

After examining our complex system of bounties, which governed enlistment during the war, and which only an expert can fully comprehend, I no longer marvel at the many acts of apparent hardship which accompanied their practical workings.

Let me illustrate a few of these hardships which have been brought to my attention. I shall make them general, for they illustrate classes rather than individuals, and comprehend thousands of a similar nature. Two soldiers leave home together; they enlist at the same time, in the same company, and in the same regiment; one is ruptured or loses a finger after a few weeks' service; he is adjudged unfitted for service, receives his discharge, and with it the bounty granted by act of March 3, 1863. It may be $100, $200, $300, or as high as $400, according to the provisions of the act under which he enlisted. To carry out the illustration more clearly, say he enlisted under act of July 22, 1861. He receives at the end of a few weeks' service $100 bounty. The other man remains in service, proves himself a hero on a dozen fields, contracts through exposure a deadly disease, that wastes his strength and consumes his body. There appears to be no hope of his immediate recovery, so he is discharged, it may be after a service of twenty-three months and twenty-nine days, yet he receives no bounty, for the law has provided none in his case. If he had remained another day in service he would have served two years, and under the law would have been entitled to $100. But he fell a day short, and though he goes through life shattered in his constitution, a mere wreck of his former self, not a dollar of bounty (except the $25 he may have received in advance) can be paid him under existing laws. His comrade who had lost a finger or become ruptured may be, for all business purposes, as good as ever, yet the law has given him the bounty and denied it to the man who comes out of the service a mere skeleton, to continue, until the merciful grave receives him, a burden to himself and friends. Is this justice? It is law; but there is nothing of equity or right in it.

Two soldiers are stricken with the same disease. They enlisted together and shared equally the hardships of the camp and field. They are sent to hospital. The keen-eyed surgeon detects death in their malady. To make way for others both are discharged. They eagerly accept the discharge certificate, for it whispers of home and loved ones. One is too far gone to leave his cot. The other, with more of hope, staggers from the building and drops dead on the road, it may be within sight of the hospital he has left. The one who remained dies in his bed. Of course you say both are treated alike; the heirs of one get the same as the other. Not so! The mere accident of dying on the road instead of in the hospital-bed makes a difference of $100 bounty. The one died in the service, the other out of it. The one, in the technical language of the law, "availed himself of his discharge;" the other did not. Lest credence may not be given to a statement which seems devoid of even common sense, I quote the law that permits it, section 3, act July 2, 1864:

And be it further enacted, That when a soldier sick in hospital shall have been discharged, or shall be discharged from the military service, but shall be unable to leave, or to avail himself of his discharge in consequence of sickness or of wounds, and shall subsequently die in such hospital, he shall be deemed to have died in the military service so far as relates to bounties.

Congress never intended this act to work a hardship, yet the one I have mentioned is but one of many that have grown out of it. Is this equitable justice? Can we afford as a nation to place a few dollars and cents in the scale to outweigh the demands that humanity makes upon us for a law that shall remove these inequalities and do exact justice to all?

Again, two soldiers of equal merit and equal length of service are on the march. One receives a stray shot from the enemy that unfits him for service, the other a stroke of lightning that disables him for life. Both are discharged, the one to quickly recover, the other to grope through life little better than an idiot. If bounty is to be paid, the victim of lightning would seem to be the most worthy to receive it. Not so, says the accounting officer. I read from Rapp's Digest, page 158, section 544:

Injuries to head and spine by lightning not regarded a wound within the meaning of the law of March 3, 1865, and April 12, 1866.

The accidental falling of a tree or the loss of a finger may disable a soldier after a few days' service so as to entitle him to his discharge. Bounty, under the law, goes with it; but a stroke of lightning, that compels the discharge of a soldier a single day before two years' service, robs him of all right to bounty.

Is this justice? If it is, what constitutes injustice? Yet it is the law, and but one of many that have in the past and will in the future create like hardships, unless some equitable plan, like the one now before the House, shall make their recurrence impossible.

Another illustration: Two neighbors leave home together; they enlist in the same company and same regiment. They reach the rendezvous on 31st March, 1864. One enrolls himself immediately. The other by some mere accident is delayed a few hours. When he presents himself the mustering officer has gone. There is no alternative but to wait until morning. The next morning he enrolls his name, and with his comrade is sent to the field. Both fall in battle, side by side. The two widows apply for pay and bounty. One gets $300 bounty, the other only $100. The widow of the latter writes to the Department. Of course the mistake will be rectified. Not so! There has been no mistake. Both have been paid according to law; the payment of the three-hundred-dollar recruit-bounty expired on the 31st of March, under joint resolution January 13, 1864; the payment of $100 commenced on the 1st of April. Therefore the law has been complied with, yet who can say that the widow is satisfied or that the justice of the law is made manifest to her. She has made as great a sacrifice as the other woman. She has been deprived of her husband. Why should the mere accident of a few hours' delay in enlistment, which was no fault of the soldier, cause her the loss of $200 bounty? It is easy to explain that the law requires it, but more difficult to drive from her mind the knowledge that she has been unjustly dealt with.

Take, again, the case of two soldiers who arrived at a military rendezvous on the 23d of December, 1863. One, eager to enlist, enrolls his name at once; the other waits until the next day. Both join the same company, march together, fight together, die side by side in the same battle. Yet the delay of a few hours in enlistment, which in the case previously mentioned took from the soldier's heirs $200 bounty, gives to the heirs of this one three times the amount of bounty allowed to the heirs of the other. Or, to make the injustice still more apparent, both may have enlisted under the same bounty law. The one is slightly wounded and discharged; the other is captured by the enemy, thrown into a rebel prison, suffers the tortures of slow starvation, after many months is exchanged, and, being of no further use as a soldier, is discharged before the expiration of two years. The wounded man went home with the full bounty in his pocket; but this prisoner of war, emaciated, a ghastly skeleton, with just enough of life left to crawl home and die in the arms of his friends, is denied the bounty. He has suffered as few are called upon to suffer, but the law has made no provision by which bounty can be paid to him.

There are other features of our bounty laws that are entirely devoid of justice. Whether the defect exists in the laws themselves or in the interpretation placed upon them by the accounting officers, I leave you to judge. It is sufficient for my purpose to show that they exist.

Under the act of July 28, 1866, soldiers enlisting for three years, who had received or were entitled to receive $100 and no more, were allowed an additional $100 bounty. This would make $200 in all. I do not believe that it was the intent of Congress in the passage of this act to punish a soldier for doing extra service. Yet such is the operation of its provisions. To illustrate: The law in question gives $100 to three-years' soldiers who had received or were entitled to receive $100 and no more. Therefore if a soldier had served his two or three years under act of July 22, 1861, and had been paid his $100, he could receive under act of July 28, 1866, an additional $100. But if after his first service he had again enlisted under act of July 4, 1864, for one year, he could not receive a dollar of this additional bounty, because under his last enlistment he had received the first installment of bounty under act of July 4, 1864, $33.33⅓. Thus it will be seen that the soldier is debarred by the law from receiving the $100 additional bounty because he had received more than $100. His first service and his second enlistment give him a total of $133.33⅓. If he had not re-enlisted he would have received $200 in all. Therefore his excess of patriotism cost him, under the law of the nation he helped to defend, just $66.66⅔. I repeat, that I do not believe that this was the intent of Congress, but nevertheless such is the practical working of the law.

What greater sacrifice can be made by any one than to yield up his life in the defense of his country? Yet the mere acident of enlistment gives or denies bounty to the heirs of those who died or were killed in the service. The term of a regiment may be for two years. A soldier enlists for "the unexpired term," that is, the organization may have but twenty months to serve when the recruit joins it and his service is to end with that of the regiment. He may be the only one in his company who is killed, yet his widow and orphans are denied the bounty because the law makes no provision to pay it. The only law that was ever passed to meet this class of cases, that of March 3, 1863, section 11, became a dead letter on the statute-books. Let me quote the law. It provides:

That the bounty of $100 provided by the present laws to be paid to the heirs of volunteers killed in battle shall be extended to the widow if living, or if she be dead, to the children of any volunteer who shall have been, or may be, killed in the service, whether he shall have enlisted for two years or a less period of time.

Could language be more explicit? It would appear that under this law every widow whose husband had been killed in battle, whether he enlisted for ten days or three years, would be fairly entitled to the $100 provided. Not so, however. The Solons who construe these laws are wiser than the Solomons who make them. Again I refer to Rapp's Digest, the recognized authority in the Office of the Second Auditor and Second Comptroller. On page 107, section 217, we find the section of the law just quoted. Under it, with the words volunteers and militia italicised, is found this remarkable decision:

No volunteers were called for prior to July 18, 1864, for a less period than two years. Those enlisting for a less term of service were militia, and not entitled to bounty.

The question arises, How did they get into service if not called for? They were duly authorized to act, were duly mustered in, performed as good service as some of the older troops, and to split hairs over a distinction without a difference, over a dead militia-man and a dead volunteer, is as ridiculous as it would be to argue that a gentleman and a member of the House must, of necessity, be two distinct individuals.

Ah, the law is unsympathetic and harsh at best; but when construed by an official who is a stranger to impartial justice, it is as hard and soulless as a block of New England granite.

These are no fancy illustrations which I have given, conjured up in the imagination to point a moral or adorn a tale. They are stubborn facts, typical of classes, covering hundreds of cases of like nature which have been passed upon by the accounting officers of the Government, and I hazard nothing in saying that there are thousands of claims rejected or suspended in the Office of the Second Auditor of the Treasury involving principles of injustice even more marked than any I have mentioned. I have offered these illustrations not in a spirit of complaint but to show you that well-intended laws that are not framed on the basis of equitable justice will necessarily beget these inequalities and produce hardships in the very act of extending blessings. Thus much I have felt constrained to say in regard to the laws and their unequal application.

WHAT EQUALIZATION WILL COST.

I come now to the probable cost of this bill. Probably no subject was ever brought before Congress on which so little reliable and satisfactory data could be procured as on this. Leave the future out altogether; we cannot tell how much has been paid in the past under the several bounty laws. At the beginning of the war our Army accounts and the payments made of bounty and pay to our soldiers and heirs appear to have been kept as if the war was to be closed in sixty days, at which time a general review of the work could be made and the proper record system adopted. A defective system once started is hard to change, so the war was closed before any radical reform was suggested, and then the work of classification became one of enormous proportions, and on this account little has been done to arrange the details of the service so as to give us the exact cost of each arm of the service, the aggregate sum paid to privates, corporals, sergeants, each rank of commissioned officers from second lieutenant to the General of the Army, and the amount paid under each appropriation of bounty, the whole so classified that we could tell by consulting the records not only how much was paid in the aggregate, but exactly what the aggregated cost of each item was. Had we such a system of records it could be ascertained more definitely how much this equalization measure would cost, leaving to speculation those questions which would arise out of heirship or the probable number of claimants now living to receive the bounty. But in the absence of this system we must estimate the cost, using the best data we can obtain.

I will have printed with my remarks a table showing the number of troops called for, the date of call, the quotas assigned, and the number actually obtained, as correct a table I believe as has been prepared:

Calls for volunteers and number obtained.

Date of call.	Number called.	Periods of service.	Quotas assigned.	Number obtained.
April 15, 1861	75,000	3 months.	73,391	93,326
May 3, 1861	42,034
May 3, 1861, regulars	22,714	3 years.	611,821	714,231
May 3, 1861, seamen	18,000
July 22, 25, 1861	500,000
May and June, 1862		3 months.		15,007
July 2, 1862	300,000	3 years.	334,835	431,958
August 4, 1862	300,000	9 months.	334,835	87,588
June 15, 1863	100,000	6 months.		16,361
October 17, 1863	300,000	3 years.	467,434	374,807
February 1, 1864	200,000	3 years.
March 14, 1864	200,000	3 years.	186,981	284,021
April 23, 1864	85,000	100 days.	113,000	83,652
July 18, 1864	500,000	1, 2, and 3 years.	346,746	384,882
December 19, 1864	300,000	1, 2, and 3 years.	290,000	204,568
Totals	2,942,748		2,759,043	2,690,401

Aggregate number obtained, reduced to three years' standard, 2,042,150.

From this table it will be seen that the total number of troops serving at different times during the war was 2,690,401. This includes one hundred days' men, three, six, nine, and twelve months' men, and those enlisting for two and three years. Reduced to a three years' standard of calls, the number would be reduced to 2,042,150. Thus, for our purpose of calculation, we can say that from April, 1861, to April, 1865, a period of four years, 2,042,150 men were called to serve three years. As some enlisted early, and others toward the close of the war, the question arises how many enlisted men actually served three years? I believe it would be a liberal estimate to say that one-half of the entire Army served for three years; and, more liberal still, to say that the average force of our armies from the beginning to the end of the war was 1,100,000 men. Let us allow to these men an average payment of $16.66⅔ a month, or just double the $8.33⅓ per month which we propose to pay as bounty, less amount already paid. This would make a total payment for forty-eight months of $879,999,936, or in round numbers $880,000,000. One-half of this amount would represent the total amount due for bounties, provided not a dollar had been paid.

How much has been paid? If we could ascertain this accurately, its deduction from the $440,000,000, ascertained to be the full amount that would be required to pay $8.33⅓ bounty per month to 1,100,000 men for forty-eight months, would give us the amount still due. In a table submitted by Mr. Gunckle, of Ohio, at the last session, he gives the amount of bounty already paid at $405,021,000. This, I am satisfied, is a mistake; for an examination of his table shows that he has charged every man enlisting under the several bounty laws with the full amount of bounty prevailing at the time. I shall therefore accept the statement furnished the Military Committee by the Paymaster-General, under date of April 22, 1876, in which the total amount of bounty paid by the Government up to March 31, 1876, is placed at $385,917,681.48.

This amount deducted from the $440,000,000, would leave $54,082,318.52 as the difference between what has been paid under present bounty laws and the amount which would have been paid on the basis of $8.33⅓ per month, provided that the average force of 1,100,000 were entitled to receive bounty. If this sum was distributed equally among the 1,100,000, it would give an average of a trifle less than $50 to each soldier.

What are the deductions that can fairly be made to the number thus estimated?

	Number.	Amount.
Deserters	198,000	$9,900,000
Substitutes	165,000	8,250,000
Veterans	158,000	7,900,000

This would leave to be paid $28,032,318.52, subject to the exceptions named in the bill, which would probably reduce the figures to about $20,000,000.

Mr. BANNING. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. THORNBURGH. Certainly.

Mr. BANNING. I wish the gentleman would state how much it would be necessary to appropriate in order to make up all that the bill calls for.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I have been spending some time in trying to make that calculation and in endeavoring to get it correct. I am satisfied, if deductions are made of bounties granted by States, that in round numbers it will take $10,000,000 to pay the amount this bill calls for. But in the calculations which I have made the basis of my remarks the sum required is between nineteen and twenty millions of dollars, excluding all bounties that are paid by the States and taking no cognizance of them.

Mr. BANNING. I desire to ask the gentleman one question further. If the bill is enacted into law as it is now, would not the amount which it would be necessary to appropriate to pay its requirements in full be between nine and ten millions of dollars?

Mr. THORNBURGH. Such is the best judgment I have formed. It is safe to say that under the most liberal estimate that can be made this bill will require a much less amount than is annually paid for pensions, and Adjutant-General Townsend, in giving his opinion on the subject of payments, stated before a committee of the Forty-third Congress that it would require at least ten years to receive, act upon, and pay out the money appropriated to meet the provisions of this bill.

THE DEBT DUE FOR VALUE RECEIVED.

I have endeavored to show that the bill before us will not call for more than $20,000,000. Is this too high a price to pay for an act of justice? If there are any who think it is, let them reflect a moment on the great work accomplished and the valne which the nation received from the services rendered. I am aware that the nation is burdened with debt; that the item of interest is a staggering load to bear; and that wise economy is a virtue to be commended. But how much greater would have been our burdens had these brave soldiers been untrue in the hour of peril. If they had faltered when they were asked to give, not dollars and cents but their lives in defense of their country, where now would have been our national securities and the private fortunes that rest upon them? We should have had no public debt, it is true; no $90,000,000 of interest to pay yearly; but the very exemption from what we deem burdensome would have been the infliction of a poverty a hundredfold harder to bear.

We meet promptly the yearly interest on the money loaned us to carry on the war for national existence; shall we shrink from the payment of a trifling sum that every consideration of justice demands to liquidate a debt long since due to those who should be the preferred creditors of the nation who gave us their time, their health, their lives, that the Republic might live? Double the amount of the estimate and who can deny the justice of the payment? The salvation of the Republic was the work accomplished. What is that worth to the forty-three million who to-day enjoy its blessings? What is it worth to the world's civilization and to aspiring humanity everywhere? What will be its value to future generations who shall draw their inspiration from the battle-fields of the rebellion as the Christian world does from the cross at Calvary?

If human selfishness blinds us to those grand moral triumphs which came from the sacrifices of our soldiers, if universal liberty and equal rights to all men weigh nothing in the scale of values, we have at hand a test by which the most selfish and grasping can determine the money-value to the nation of the work for which this bill provides an equitable payment. This test is the census of 1870. Examine its tables, note the unparalleled growth of the nation in every department of labor, in every branch of home industry. The Eastern, Middle, Western, and Pacific States were called upon to bear the heavy burdens of the war, but the only true sacrifices were those of their soldiers.

In the item of real estate note the increase in value in a single decade. In the Eastern States this increase was $576,163,230; in the Middle States, $1,515,260,840; in the Western States, $916,062,193, and in the Pacific States, $121,015,129, or a total increase, in the face of a destructive war, of $3,128,501,392. During the same time the real estate of the Southern States shows a depreciation in value of $365,111,106. Let us ask ourselves the question suggested by these facts: Had we failed how great would have been the depreciation of our property? That we did not fail is due to the valor, the undying patriotism of the soldiers of the Union.

Take another lesson from the census. In order to present it clearly I present the following table to show the growth in the products of our manufactures. It but strengthens the former statement that the wealth of the nation was born of the sacrifices of our soldiers:

States.	Products of manufactures.		Increase.
	1860.	1870.
Eastern States	$468,599,287	$1,009,116,772	$540,517,485
Middle States	706,926,290	1,793,813,923	986,887,633
Western States	346,675,290	1,072,933,358	726,258,068
Southern States	193,462,521	253,618,436	60,155,915
Pacific States	71,229,989	89,342,482	18,112,493
Total	1,876,893,377	4,208,824,971	2,331,931,594

The following table however contains a more impressive lesson, and gives a more vivid idea of the immense wealth that has grown out of the victories of our Armies than the other statement presented.

Our growth in true wealth has been simply marvelous, as the table appended will show:

States.	True wealth.		Increase.
	1860.	1870.
Eastern	$1,863,848,765	$4,039,875,247	$2,176,026,482
Middle	4,150,920,784	12,181,738,740	8,030,817,956
Western	3,966,735,753	9,536,453,603	5,569,717,850
Southern	5,868,209,219	3,343,007,589	*2,525,201,630
Pacific	236,805,250	721,459,961	484,654,711
Territories	73,096,297	245,963,367	172,887,070

*Decrease; value of slaves included in 1860.

The failure of the Southern States, even though tempered by a magnanimity on the part of the victor that has no parallel in the world's history, is followed by a loss of $2,525,201,630 in true wealth. How startling the contrast! The victory of the Northern States, made possible by the devotion of our soldiers, is accompanied by an increase of true wealth to the enormous amount of $16,434,104,069.

Here, then, we have the value in dollars and cents of the patriotic labors of our volunteer soldiers. Can any fair-minded man dwell upon this stupendous growth, attributable to the preservation of the nation, and deny the justice of this equalization measure which will cancel the money debt which the nation owes its preservers? Are there some who believe that the country has paid enough for the services rendered, and that no more money should be given the soldier? Let me ask them of what value would have been our currency to-day had not our soldiers saved the nation? Our bonds and notes would have been less valuable than the paper on which they are printed, and, like the currency of the southern confederacy, they would be sold to the paper-mill by the bushel or barrel. The wise financial policy of the republican party did much toward maintaining our national credit; but this rested upon the valor of our soldiers, and would have come to naught had they failed in the work intrusted to them. During the war our currency fell in value with every defeat and rose in value with every victory. When Richmond fell and the confederate armies surrendered to our brave soldiers, our national bonds and currency rose in value over $400,000,000 in a single day. Money-holders rejoiced, the people were wild with joy; yet the soldiers of our armies knew, if others were forgetful of the fact, that every dollar of this appreciation had been paid for by the blood of their comrades and the tears of their widows and orphans. Therefore, to cancel this debt we still owe the soldier, or his widow and orphans, is not only to remove all the inequalities of the character I have mentioned, and the just complaints that arise therefrom, but to return to them what has been too long withheld, their share, richly earned, of the money whose value in peace has come from their sacrifices in war.

I urge the payment of this bounty money as a debt, as sacred and binding in its character as if it already stood recognized in our statutes. I have no sympathy for that view which construes bounty as a gratuity and not a debt. A gratuity conveys the idea of simple charity, the bestowment of something to alleviate suffering or prevent distress. There is no moral claim to enforce it; it is a free gift, without any value received. Not so with bounties given our soldiers. The grant was accompanied with conditions, and these conditions demanded bodily suffering, hardships, privations, heroic courage, and oftentimes life itself. These were the considerations named in the bond, and being faithfully given the bounty offered became a debt as sacred as any between man and man. In living up to the strict letter of the bond the nation has unwittingly violated its spirit, and to correct this, to do justice where justice is due, to reward like services with like bounty and thus put the cap-stone on the pillar of national gratitude, that future generations may know that we were as just as we were generous, is the purpose of this bill.

At no more seasonable time could this debt be paid. The depression of business has brought poverty to the door of many who served their country in the hour of need and who never received a dollar of its bounty. To such the passage of this bill will be as a ray of sunlight. The diseases of the camp and prison-pen still linger in the system of thousands who gave their strength to the nation, but under its laws have been denied its bounty. To such the passage of this bill will be tardy justice, gratefully appreciated. The death of husband and father has left to the cold charities of the world thousands of widows and orphans. Our pension laws grant but little to these worthy wards of the nation. Hard times pinch them, and want and misery are their only companions. Their prayers ascend to Heaven for this relief which a nation owes them. Shall a republic that lives because of their sacrifices be deaf to their petitions and entreaties? To all such the passage of this bill will be as the sweet answer to prayer, telling them that a grateful nation has not yet forgotten them. Pass this bill, and homes that have been shrouded in gloom since the close of the war will enjoy the first ray of sunlight that has crossed their threshold.

The wealth of a nation is not in its accumulation of gold and silver; it is rather to be found in the happiness of its people and in the loyal satisfaction expressed by them in the wisdom and justice of its laws. To promote this happiness and to rekindle the affection of those who have had just cause for complaint I advocate this bill. The money to be paid under its provisions will not impoverish the nation. It will not be felt as a burden; on the contrary, it will lift from the industries of the country a burden that has long rested upon them. It will relieve want, inspire activity, find its way into business channels, and like new blood infused into the sinking frame will impart life and vigor to the whole system. It will go, not into the pockets of the capitalists, but into the hands of the poor, the industrious, the deserving, and in the shape of products of labor will contribute to the general wealth, and in time be restored to the nation that gave it as an investment a hundred-fold repaid.

As a citizen who has enjoyed the blessings of this Republic, as a soldier who shared the privations of war, and as the Representative of a patriotic constituency who love the Union and know the full value of the services rendered to preserve it, I advocate and urge the prompt passage of this bill.

For its patriotic impulses, which found expression in wise laws and firm measures; for its faith in the Republic which in the darkest hours never wavered; for its support of our armies in the field and its tender care of the sick and wounded in hospitals; for its ready response to justice in striking the shackles from the slave; for its generous bestowment of bounties to those who bore the brunt of battle; for its permanent pensions to the disabled and the dependent, and for its wisdom in gathering up the fragments of the broken confederacy and re-uniting them as an integral part of the Union, the republican party deserves the thanks of the civilized world. It but needed the enactment of this equitable measure, to which it was pledged, to have rounded out its record and made its administration of justice the most glorious chapter on human government that the world has ever read.

But as this measure is not partisan in its character, but one that has received the indorsement of both parties, through State Legislatures and political conventions, let me express the hope that the failure of a republican Congress to secure it as a law of the land has in no wise impaired the claim or made it less binding on the representatives of the people. It represents—if there is any meaning in language—the expressed will of the nation, so grandly uttered by the lamented Lincoln, when he stood at his second inaugural on the threshold of the temple of peace, to him the gateway of immortality. To the nation, whose love of justice I invoke, and to those who make and administer its laws, I commend these oft-repeated but still golden words:

> With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive to finish the work we are in—to bind up the nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle and for his widow and his orphans; to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and other nations.

Mr. LYNCH. I have been unable to obtain a copy of the bill introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. THORNBURGH] and reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, and I desire to inquire of him if it provides that white and colored soldiers, their widows and their heirs, shall be placed on precisely the same footing?

Mr. THORNBURGH. It does. The bill makes no distinction of color. Any man who served this Government in the Army during the rebellion who has not received his full bounty will be entitled to $8.33 for every month he served.

Mr. LYNCH. Then it is an excellent bill.

Mr. COOK. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. EAMES. Will the gentleman before he moves the previous question yield to me to offer an amendment?

Mr. COOK. No, sir.

Mr. EAMES. I hope the call for the previous question will be voted down that I may offer my amendment.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 93, noes 6.

Mr. O'BRIEN. A quorum has not voted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then let tellers be ordered.

Mr. EAMES. I would like to have my amendment read for the information of the House.

Mr. BANNING. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. HOSKINS.) A quorum not having voted on the question of seconding the demand for the previous question, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. COOK, and the gentleman from Rhode Island, Mr. EAMES.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 122, noes 24.

So the previous question was seconded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the main question be now ordered?

Mr. O'BRIEN. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HILL. Take them on the passage of the bill.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 5[illegible] not a sufficient number.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The main question was ordered.

The question was on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time; and being taken, there were—ayes 101, noes 30.

Mr. O'BRIEN. A quorum has not voted,

Mr. THORNBURGH. I call for tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum not having voted, tellers will be ordered, and the Chair appoints the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. COOK, and the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. O'BRIEN.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 123, noes 27.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I call for the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. COOK,] who has charge of the bill, has risen to close debate. He is entitled to one hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I understood that by unanimous consent an hour and a half was allowed for the consideration of this bill. Does not that imply that the bill should be disposed of within that hour and a half? It was understood when that arrangement was made that the Geneva-award bill, under the charge of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LORD,] would then be entitled to the floor. Under these circumstances, I suggest that the gentleman from Georgia, inasmuch as everybody understands the provisions of the bill, which has been pending here for seven years, bring it to a vote at once.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. COOK,] who has charge of the bill.

Mr. HURLBUT. We do not want any more debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule the gentleman from Georgia is entitled to an hour after the previous question has been seconded.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit that the time to be occupied by this bill was limited to an hour and a half.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I did not understand any such order to be made. There was some such arrangement between the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LORD,] but the House made no such order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COOK. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. GOODIN.]

Mr. GOODIN. Mr. Speaker, I am quite glad that amid the various special orders upon the Calendar which have consumed so much time in their discussion the friends of the pending bill to equalize the bounties of the gallant men who upon land and sea successfully fought the war of the great rebellion have at last been enabled to get this hour set apart for its consideration.

Sir, the sense of justice of the American people has been aroused at the inequality which is the offspring of the established system of bounties authorized by the several statutes upon that subject. I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that great difficulties have been experienced in the endeavor to frame a bill which will meet all the equitable phases presented, but I believe that the present measure approximates as nearly as any that could well be devised in securing equalization in bounties.

I have never been able, Mr. Speaker, to exactly see why, in the allotment of bounties to soldiers and seamen, discriminations should be made against those whose term of service was short, either by reason of the shortness of enlistment or by reason of discharges in consequence of the termination of the war. The theory—or one of the several theories—upon which a bounty was paid to those enlisting for three years or during the war, and who served fully two years of their time, was, that when the service was long and continuous the probabilities were in favor of consequent dangers and hardships. While, as a general proposition, it might be reasonably assumed that the longer the service the greater the trials and dangers, yet there were many cases where, in a very brief service, the soldier endured untold trials and confronted great perils. So far as engagements in battle were concerned, many newly-enlisted soldiers in the very month of enlistment were called upon to face the enemy on several hard-fought fields, while in many other instances—with no fault of the soldiers, I admit, who were ever ready to go where duty called—the full period of enlistment passed away and the smoke of battle was rarely, if ever, seen by them.

But, aside from services actually rendered in battle, thousands of instances occurred during that fearful conflict when sickness and deaths in hospitals were far more to be dreaded than the bristling bayonets upon the field of battle. No, Mr. Speaker, I see no real basis for discrimination in favor of or against any soldier who performed duty in that great struggle. Whether the period of enlistment be long or short, without reference to the duration of service I would allow a fixed sum per month, as does this bill, to every man who actually served in the cause of his imperiled country.

This is what we term equalization; the placing of every soldier upon precisely the same footing. As I have said, sir, the failure of a soldier to march or fight was no matter over which he had control. His enlistment and enrollment placed him at the disposal of the military commander who had supervision over him; and let it be said to the credit of that noble Army of citizens who, garbed in the chosen blue of the Republic, while the life of the nation was jeopardized, went forth to do service for their country, that of the number of enrollments, which embraced about two million six hundred and seventy-five thousand men, comparatively few wavered in the discharge of their whole duty.

I had intended, Mr. Speaker, to discuss somewhat in detail the provisions of this bill, and to submit some statistics and estimates showing the resources of the country, the amount of money required to carry the measure into effect, and to correct, as far as I could, some of the erroneous conclusions, as I believe them, arrived at by those who seem to shudder at the thought of such an enactment as is here proposed. But the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. THORNBURGH] has anticipated me, and by his able, logical, and carefully prepared speech has left little margin for me. The tables submitted by him have manifestly been compiled with care, and from them it would seem that instead of a requirement of thirty, forty, or fifty millions of dollars to carry this bill into effect twenty millions will be ample for that purpose. But, sir, if the highest of these estimates should be necessary that fact would not drive me from its support, so thoroughly am I convinced that the principle upon which the bill is founded is sound in reason and abounds in good conscience. But it may be claimed, sir, that even if but $20,000,000 should be required to equalize bounties according to the purposes of this bill, that the amount is too large to be expended at this time; that admitting the equity of the cause for which I contend, we should wait until our Treasury shall have been replenished, until the country becomes more prosperous, until a general revival of business is brought about.

I am quite cognizant, Mr. Speaker, of the fact that financial embarrassments surround thousands of our people at this time; that the authorization of the issue of gold interest-bearing bonds to purchase silver bullion and the fixing of the 1st day of January, 1879, for the resumption of specie payments has caused distrust, anxiety, and alarm throughout the entire country; that the people's money has been stolen by faithless officials, and that corruption and extravagance in the administration of public affairs have caused misery and shame everywhere. But I rejoice, sir, to know that the spirit of economy has animated this House, and that in the several measures which have received its sanction millions of dollars have already been saved compared with expenditures for like purposes in the past.

This fact, Mr. Speaker, emboldens me somewhat in urging the passage of this bill. If in a single session of Congress we shall be able to save a sufficient sum to meet the requirements of this proposition of the equalization of bounties, I shall certainly feel that I have been compensated for the unfaltering support I have given to every measure which has been considered by this House looking to the reduction of public expenditures. In this connection I desire also to say that in each vote which I have cast in the line of retrenchment I have kept steadily in mind that every dollar saved would serve the friends of this bill as an argument when it came to be considered against those who feared that the financial condition of the country would not warrant the expenditure. As I had occasion once before to say upon this floor, I now repeat, that the million and a half dollars donated to the centennial corporation for an international jubilee had better by far be applied to aid and assist in furthering this great act of justice, and I trust, Mr. Speaker, that whatever of opposition comes to the measure, it may not come from the lips of those who so vehemently pressed the passage of the great show bill!

But, Mr. Speaker, I was remarking upon the money which would be taken from the Treasury and given to the soldiers if this bill should meet the sanction of Congress, and of the curtailment of expenditures in other directions to meet this new demand upon us. Although as a nation we are far from that condition of prosperity which should be ours legitimately, yet that our energies would be crippled materially if we should vote the amount of money called for by this bill I do not believe. In a time of general business depression I know of nothing which would revive the drooping spirits of the laboring classes more than the diffusion of a few millions of dollars throughout the country. It must be remembered that this money will go to the debtor classes, thus enabling them to pay their small indebtedness, and soon the effect of the distribution will be felt in the life and impetus given to business in every county and State in the Union.

Sir, the poor soldiers of the land, whose term of enlistment and service have not been such as to secure them bounties under laws previously enacted, are looking to this Congress, and to this session of it, for proper recognition. As they recall the reminiscences and sufferings in camp and field, and reflect upon the sacrifices endured for the nation's safety, they are slow to see the humanity of the reasoning by which they are shorn of the pittance which has been granted to their comrades in arms. Two citizens residing in the same neighborhood at their country's call enter the service. Both enlist for "three years or during the war," the Government agreeing to give them for their services $13 per month! They bid farewell to home and all of its endearments, and are attired in the proud panoply of an American soldier, and with their brave companions take up their line of march to danger's front.

Brave boys are they, brave boys are they,
Who go at their country's call;
And yet, and yet, we cannot forget
That many brave boys must fall.

The two soldiers named meet the foe in the same engagements, sleep in the same tent, eat in the same mess, drink out of the same canteen, and generally experience the same privations and hardships. The one serves exactly two years, and receives $200 of bounty; the other lacks but a day of the two years' service, and gets no bounty at all. The unfairness to the last-mentioned soldier is manifest. Proportionately to the time of service each should receive equal consideration at the hands of the country.

But, Mr. Speaker, we frequently hear it asserted outside of this Hall—and it is not unlikely that it may be here insisted—that if we pass this measure giving indiscriminately to all of our soldiers alike equal bounties, we should also in the line of exact justice re-imburse the several States for local bounties paid by them to secure enlistments. Some of the States paid no bounties, while others paid large amounts. But, sir, while fully appreciating the patriotism which dictated the appropriation by municipalities of money as an inducement to fill up the ranks of the Army, it must be remembered that by these means the draft was prevented in those States, and thus a benefit was derived from the outlay. Hence I say, Mr. Speaker, I would not vote to re-imburse the States for money expended to enable the quotas to be filled and to avoid conscription, neither would I leave those who have failed in securing bounties in those States where no local bounties were paid, to be provided for by such States.

These men, sir, were not State soldiers; they were not summoned to arms for the maintenance of local laws. The nation itself was menaced and in danger of dismemberment and overthrow. The men who engaged on the side of the Union fought for the preservation of our national existence. State boundaries formed "No pent-up Utica" for their exploits of patriotic valor, and we do not propose now to refer them to the States for that justice of which they have been deprived!

The nation, independent of what States or individuals may have done or may do for its citizen-soldiery, should deal honestly, humanely, generously, equally with those who, in times of public peril, braved everything for their country's welfare. It has been said that—

> A people who cannot find in their own proper forces their own protection are not worth saving.

And let me say, sir, that the nation which neglects to properly recognize the chivalric deeds of its fighting forces not only evokes the contempt and censure of other powers, but is guilty of the severest wrong to itself.

Mr. Speaker, I feel a special solicitude for the passage of this bill, because of the interest taken in it by the soldiers of my own State, and particularly those of my district. Hundreds of them who fought gallantly in the late war have never received any bounty whatever. In the first call for troops right nobly did that young Commonwealth "rally round the flag" and furnish her quota. During the beginning of their service the First and Second Regiments of Kansas Volunteers were engaged in the first great battle of the war. There is not a gentleman upon this floor who does not remember vividly the battle of Wilson's Creek, where the chivalrous Lyon fell. The deeds of daring of the Kansas troops upon that bloody field on the memorable 10th day of August, in the first year of the war—

> Where the hottest fire was seen and heard,
> And the loud cannon pealed its hoarsest strains, will never be forgotten by a people who love devotion to principle and admire that spirit of bravery which dares all things and fears nothing. Their patriotism is sweetly enshrined in thousands of grateful hearts; and, whether living or dead, their acts upon that occasion will survive for all time. Fully one-third of the two regiments named, either wounded or slain, fell upon that field; and under existing laws many of the survivors have failed in securing any bounty at all. By the passage of this bill all those who have thus been deprived will be allowed a bounty proportioned to the length of service which they may have rendered.

But, Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to occupy so much of the time of the House as I have already consumed, and I shall not undertake further to point out what I conceive to be the various cases under different calls for troops where injustice has been done to enlisted men. To my mind they are numerous, and I know of no legislation which will meet this injustice better than the pending bill. I congratulate myself that it has received the unanimous approval of the Military Committee, and, further, that it is here reported from that committee by one who fought gallantly upon the other side in that fratricidal struggle. It is also a matter of the profoundest satisfaction to me, as it must be to the country, to know that among its most enthusiastic supporters are to be found those upon this floor and elsewhere who met these men, for whom we provide, upon many hotly-contested fields. What better earnest of returning good-will, what better evidence of a cemented, restored, blessed, happy, "perpetual union," such as was contemplated by its founders, do we desire, than to find the soldiers of the South admitting the loss of the cause for which they contended, coming forward with such unanimity to the support of a measure which gives substantial recognition not only to those against whom they fought, but also to the survivors of those who fell in that never-to-be-forgotton contest!

And now, sir, since this is the case, let those whose sympathies and energies from the beginning were on the side of the Government not hesitate to give their hearty approval to this bill. And to the Union soldiers upon this floor let me say that here is an opportunity for the commingling of the "blue and the gray" which means something. Let us all strike hands in meting out to our brave defenders an act of simple justice which has already been too long procrastinated.

Mr. COOK. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. LANDERS.]

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. By the consent of the committee I desire to submit an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would say to the gentleman from Indiana that no amendments are now in order and none can be offered; but if the gentleman desires to have the amendment read as a portion of his remarks, the time occupied in the reading will be taken out of the three minutes to which he is entitled.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. As the amendment cannot be offered, I desire it read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the Clerk will read the amendment as a part of the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

> That in case the bounty due any person under this act shall amount to a sum not less than $100, it shall be at the option of such person to receive from the Government, through the Second Auditor of the Treasury, in lieu of such bounty, a warrant, not subject to assignment, receivable at any of the land offices of the United States in full payment of one hundred and sixty acres of any of the public lands subject to entry by homestead or purchase; and for any lands located with said warrants patents shall be issued without requiring proof of either residence or settlement.
> That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue an amount of legal-tender notes necessary to carry out the provisions of this act: Provided, That the whole amount issued, including the amount already outstanding, will not exceed $400,000,000.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, at a very early day in the session I introduced a bill very similar to the one now under consideration. It differed from this one in that it contained the two sections that I have had read. It will be seen that my object in offering this amendment was to provide means for paying the soldiers. At the last session of Congress there was a bill passed by this House equalizing the bounties of soldiers very like the one now under consideration. That bill was vetoed, one of the grounds for vetoing the bil. being that there was no money to pay with.

[Cries of "O, no!"]

Mr. LAWRENCE. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. For that reason I desire that money shall be provided to pay the soldiers in this bill.

Again, it is well understood that a large volume of currency is being taken from the country by the national banks, and Congress is doing nothing to supply the deficiency thus created. I insist that as national-bank currency is withdrawn from circulation, legal-tenders should be used in its stead. The question is often asked how are we to get our legal-tender currency into circulation?

I say, Mr. Speaker, that here is a fine opportunity. Soldiers as a general thing are needy men, and if this currency be paid out to the soldier it will speedily find its way into business circles so that it will not only be a great benefit to the soldier but also to the business interests of the country.

Mr. COOK. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. O'BRIEN.]

Mr. O'BRIEN. It has been announced here to-day by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. THORNBURGH,] who opened the debate in favor of this bill, that it was a popular measure and that it had three times passed the House of Representatives. It has not yet become a law; so that it is apparent from the fact that it has three times passed the House and has not yet become a law that its popularity is to some extent tinged by other facts connected with the bill.

Mr. BANNING. Will the gentleman allow me to say that the soldier never had as many real friends in Congress as he has now.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I find in answer to what the gentleman from Ohio remarks the fact that upon this floor this bill is supported, I believe, by every member of the republican party.

The opposition to it does not come from any political party, so far as I know, on account of any political reasons. I do not oppose it upon the ground of politics. I do not oppose it because of the fact that the soldiers are to derive some advantage from the many millions that are to be appropriated by this bill. I do not oppose it because I am unwilling to recognize the great debt of gratitude which this nation owes to the soldiers who perpetuated the Government in the late struggle by their arms, by their lives. I am willing to recognize that it is not within the power of this people to pay that debt; that there is not money enough in the Treasury of the United States to-day, nor has there been since the war ceased, to compensate the families of the men who laid down their lives in behalf of the Government, in behalf of what they believed to be their country.

But, sir, I invite attention of the House to the fact that this is not in any sense what the gentleman from Tennessee in an able speech, carefully prepared for the occasion, claims that it is, and that is, a legal debt binding upon the Government. I would scorn, were I a representative of a soldiery constituency, to admit the fact that my soldier constituents went into that war under any obligation, either express or implied, that they were to be paid for the services that they were to render; that the blood that they were to shed was to be compensated with money. I know the fact that there are those upon this very floor, men who served gallantly in the Union Army, men who contributed their treasure in behalf of the maintenance of the Government, who would be unwilling to take a single dollar or as many thousands as you could pour into their laps, if it were to be given them as legal compensation for the services which they rendered. If we owe our soldiers anything we owe them that which we never can pay; we owe them the heartfelt, undying, inestimable gratitude of a free people for the liberties which they have preserved for us and for our children.

But, sir, there is not a man in this House to-day who dares to stand up in his place and say that the patriotism which emanated from every soldier's heart, as he shouldered his musket and faced the enemy in the late war, was manifested by him for an equivalent in money. It is true that it was necessary that the soldiers should be paid. It is true that in some of the States and even by the Government of the United States bounties were offered to a certain extent to secure their services. The answer to that is that that money was immediately handed over to their bereft families; they themselves did not take a dollar of it. Their bounties were either given directly or passed over at once by the proper papers to their families.

Our soldiers labored and toiled and shed their blood and laid down their lives in behalf of the great principles of constitutional liberty, of patriotism, of love of country, through which motives they were invited to take their places in the field in defense of their beloved country. Yet it is now here pretended that we owe them a debt of money; that we are to pay them for their services; that we are to give them an equivalent which will offset the services rendered by them; that we are to wipe out our obligation to them by an equalization of bounties to be given to all the men who fought in the late war. Those who went in the first hour for a few dollars are to receive the same pay as the men who went into the war at the eleventh hour for the dollars they received.

In the name of the soldiers, so far as I know their sentiments, I repudiate such a thought, such an idea. There is no man here the advocate of this bill, whether it be the introducer of it or the one who stands sponsor for it from the committee, who is more faithful in his devotion, more warm in his love, more determined in his honor for the soldiers than I am. There is no one here who is more willing under proper circumstances and in a proper manner to give to the soldiers what really is a proper gratuity.

If we were in the midst of plenty, if to-day our Treasury, as it has been in the past under democratic rule, was filled to the overflowing of its coffers, then I might say it might be proper and right, in the magnanimity of a great people looking to that gratitude which we owe the soldiers who upheld the Government and maintained it when it was in peril, to give them a gratuity, a bounty to the full extent, perhaps, that may be proposed by this bill.

Such, however, is not the fact. We are confronted to-day by a Treasury with a deficit of millions. Our people are impoverished; our industries are paralyzed. We are not in any condition, either before the country or as the Representatives of our constituents, to say that we have that within our control which we can give away as a bounty or as a gift to any man or any set of men; for a bounty is a gift.

Let the soldiers, through their Representatives, claim all honor, for they are entitled to it; they are entitled to the gratitude of this generation; they are entitled to the gratitude of generations to come. But there is no just, no legal right by which their Representatives can demand of this Government, at this time, that we, with a depleted Treasury, should pay out a sum of money amounting, as has been alleged, to $100,000,000 to gratify a sentiment. It was alleged by a Senator, in a speech which I would have the right to read, that upon information received from the officers of the Treasury, who are regularly appointed to ascertain such facts, the amount that might be required under this bill would exceed $100,000,000. It is true that it is claimed here that this bill will appropriate a less sum—not more than twenty-nine millions or thirty millions or forty millions of dollars.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, by what authority the majority in this House, responsible for the action of the House, have any right to step up to an almost empty Treasury and take from it its last dollar, and then to impose upon the people an additional debt, a bonded debt; for you must resort to that in order to obtain the money so that any person whatever may be given a gratuity.

We are not in a condition to do that which this bill asks. I beg of this House in the name of justice which is paramount to gratitude, in the name of law, in the name of their duty to the American people, to do no such ungracious and unfaithful act as to impose a new debt upon this people without their direct and positive command.

[Here the hammer fell.]

One moment more, Mr. Speaker. I further appeal to this House in the name of justice to put behind them any presumed political expediency which may tempt them to vote for this bill. I tell my friend that never yet was there an unjust act done upon the principle that the end justifies the means, or that some political expediency will wipe out the guilt, that the result of the wrong did not fall upon the heads of those who committed it. I trust that this House to-day, I appeal to both sides of it, will not, unless in their consciences they believe it be just, vote for any such measure as this. If they are honest men, as I know them to be, if they will but reason this matter logically and fairly, if they will regard the true interest of the soldier and of the country, they will not perpetrate this great wrong and inflict upon an impoverished people an additional debt amounting to such an enormous sum.

I have felt it my duty, at the risk of my motives being misunderstood, to oppose this measure. I believe that the country will hold us to a strict and just accountability for our actions. I cannot conscientiously vote away the money of the people to gratify a popular demand based not upon right but on sentiment, though the sentiment may commend itself as a gracious act for heroic services in behalf of our common country. With this duty performed I leave the question to the House.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. Will the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COOK] yield to me for a few minutes?

Mr. COOK. How long a time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. Not more than three or four minutes.

Mr. COOK. I will yield to the gentleman for three minutes.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. The time is very rapidly approaching, Mr. Speaker, when those who preserved this Republic will be considered as more entitled to the gratitude of the American people than those who founded it. And in reply to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] I would say that this bill does not propose to wipe out the obligation conferred by the soldiers of the Union upon the country by the preservation of the Government. We cannot wipe out that obligation until we wipe out this House; we cannot wipe out that obligation until we wipe out this Capitol; we cannot wipe out that obligation until we wipe out our country, the place it has held among the nations, and our whole history. Nothing can ever wipe out that obligation until there is no Union to love and no people to love it.

In the brief time allowed me, I wish to say that this bill merely proposes to give to soldiers who served the Government faithfully and did not receive their equal share of bounty the same amount that was given by the law of the United States to other soldiers. It proposes in simple justice to equalize the small amount, the miserable pittance, paid to the United States soldiers in the late war. I say that no treasury can be so bankrupt that it cannot and should not meet such an obligation. I say to the gentleman from Maryland that no demand upon the country presents itself with such a strong claim upon the American people. I say to the gentleman when he rises to vindicate other claims that there is no stronger or higher demand upon the Government than to do equal justice to the soldiers of the United States who defended this country and gave it to us.

I yield one minute of my time to the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE.]

Mr. PAGE. I have only one word to say in reference to this bill; and that will be in reply to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING,] the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who stated that the House of Representatives, until the present session of Congress, had been unfriendly to the passage of this measure. While the election was pending in California last year I was attacked by every democratic newspaper and every democratic stump-orator in my district for having voted in favor of the last bill equalizing the bounties of soldiers. I am, therefore, glad to know that the other side of the House is ready and willing at this time to join this side in doing justice to the brave soldiers who fought so gallantly in defense of our common country.

Mr. COOK. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING.]

Mr. BANNING. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to make a speech or an argument upon this bill. This House has frequently heretofore declared in favor of this measure. It has been promised to the soldier since 1862; but it is left for this Congress to redeem the promises of gentlemen upon the opposite side, who have been making them and making them and making them, but have never kept them. I believe that those promises will be redeemed to-day, and it will be done by this Congress, that gentlemen have seen fit to denominate a "confederate Congress." When the news goes abroad that this "confederate Congress" has rendered unto the soldier that which is his, but which the republican party failed to give him, then I hope the cry of "confederate Congress" will be buried forever.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will not take out of the Treasury the large amount of money stated by some gentlemen upon this floor. If we should repay to the States the amount that they have paid, it would take, as has been demonstrated, $29,000,000. But the bill avoids that; and the whole amount necessary to carry out the equalization made by this bill will be only between nine and ten million dollars, which will not be paid all at once, but in the course of the next six years.

I hope, therefore, that this bill will pass, and that the men who carried the knapsack and musket in the service of the Government will be given that bounty which is justly theirs. I mean the men who volunteered early in the service; not the men who received large bounties, not the men who went into the war as substitues, but the soldiers who went at the first call to the defense of the country.

I hope that we may now have a vote, and that this bill will be passed by the large majority which justice and right demand it should receive.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] a question.

Mr. KEHR. I wish to put a question to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. COOK.]

Mr. FORT. I ask the gentleman from Georgia to yield to me five minutes.

[Cries of "Regular order."]

Mr. COOK. I must decline to yield. I ask that a vote be taken.

Mr. FORT. As the gentleman does not yield to me, I ask leave to have a few remarks on this subject printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection. [See Appendix.]

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent that this debate may be prolonged thirty minutes.

Several members objected.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING,] who has said that this side of the House have broken their promises in reference to this measure, whether he thinks that this bill can be passed without our votes?

Mr. BANNING. No, sir; we expect to have all good men like you vote with us.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded, which is the third reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD, and not read in full at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless objection be made the bill will be read by its title only.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, demanded the reading of the engrossed bill.

The bill was read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will be done.

The bill is as follows:

That there shall be allowed and paid to each and every non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, and private soldier, sailor, and marine, including those borne upon the rolls as slaves and Indians, who faithfully served as such in the military service of the United States, who have been honorably discharged from such service, the sum of $8.33½ a month for all the time which such non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, and private soldier, sailor, and marine, actually so served, between the 12th day of April, 1861, and the 9th day of May, 1865. And the provisions of this act shall extend to all soldiers who were mustered into the service of the United States, and were subsisted, clothed, and paid by the Government of the United States.

SEC. 2. That in case of the death, either before or after the passage of this act, of any such non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, or private soldier, sailor, or marine, the allowance and payment shall be paid to his widow, if she has not remarried, or if there be no widow, or she has remarried, then to the minor child or children of such deceased non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, or private soldier, sailor, or marine.

SEC. 3. That in computing and ascertaining the bounty to be paid to any non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, or private soldier, sailor, or marine, or to his proper representative, under the provisions of this act, there shall be deducted therefrom any and all bounties already paid under the provisions of any United States or State laws.

SEC. 4. That no bounty under the provisions of this act shall be paid to or on account of any soldier who served as a substitute in the Army, or who was a captured prisoner of war at the time of his enlistment, nor to any one who was discharged, on his own application or request, for other cause than disability incurred in the service prior to the 19th day of April, 1865, unless such discharge was obtained with a view to re-enlistment, or to accept promotion in the military or naval service of the United States, or to be transferred from one branch of the military service to another, and such person did actually so re-enlist, or accept promotion, or was so transferred; and no bounty shall be paid to any soldier discharged on the application or at the request of parents, guardians, or other persons, or on the ground of minority.

SEC. 5. That every petition or application for bounty made under the provisions of this act shall disclose and state specifically, under oath and under the pains and penalties of perjury, what amount of bounty has been paid under the provisions of any United States or State laws to the non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, or private soldier, sailor, or marine by whom or by whose representative the claim is made.

SEC. 6. That any attorney or agent who shall receive from any claimant a sum greater than $10 for the prosecution of any claim under the provisions of this act, upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine not to exceed $1,000, or imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or both, as the court or jury may adjudge, and shall forever thereafter be excluded from prosecuting claims of any nature whatsoever against the Government of the United States.

SEC. 7. That it shall not be lawful for any soldier to transfer, assign, barter, or sell his discharge, final statement, descriptive list, or other paper, for the purpose of transferring, assigning, bartering, or selling any interest in any bounty under the provisions of this act. And all such transfers, assignments, barters, or sales heretofore made are hereby declared null and void as to any rights intended to be so conveyed by any such soldier.

SEC. 8. That in any case where a person entitled to receive payment of bounty under the provisions of this act shall make application therefor, or where such application shall be made by the proper representative of such person, being deceased, and the discharge of such person has been lost, it shall be competent for the accounting officers to receive, in lieu of the actual production of such discharge, proof of the actual loss of the same and secondary proof of its issue and contents, together with proof of the identity of the claimant or person deceased, under such rules defining the character and form of the evidence as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

SEC. 9. That no adjustment or payment of any claim of any non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, or private soldier, sailor, or marine, or his proper representative, under the provisions of this act, shall be made, unless the application be filed within five years from the passage of the same.

Mr. KASSON. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 141, nays 46, not voting 103; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Banning, Blair, Bland, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, and Young—103.

So the bill was passed.

During the vote,

Mr. BOONE stated that his colleague, Mr. BROWN, was absent by leave of the House on account of sickness, and that he was paired on all questions with the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HARRIS.]

He further stated that his colleague, Mr. MILLIKEN, was absent on account of sickness.

Mr. WIKE stated that his colleague, Mr. SPARKS, was absent on account of sickness.

Mr. McFARLAND stated that his colleague, Mr. YOUNG, was unavoidably absent, having been called away by important business.

Mr. DOUGLAS stated that he was paired with Mr. MACDOUGALL, who if present would vote in the affirmative, while he himself would vote in the negative.

Mr. DURAND stated that his colleagues, Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS and Mr. CONGER, were absent by order of the House, and that if present both would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. JOHN REILLY stated that his colleague, Mr. JAMES B. REILLY, was absent by leave of the House.

Mr. SOUTHARD stated that his colleague, Mr. NEAL, was absent attending the funeral of a friend—relative.

Mr. CABELL stated that his colleague, Mr. TUCKER, was absent by leave of the House, and that if present he would vote in the negative.

Mr. SPRINGER stated that the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. SPENCER, was absent on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. FORT stated that his colleague, Mr. STEVENSON, was absent by order of the House on the Louisiana Committee, and that, if present, he thinks he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. W. B. WILLIAMS stated that his colleague, Mr. BRADLEY, was absent by leave of the House.

Mr. RAINEY stated that his colleague, Mr. MACKEY, was absent by leave of the House, and that if present he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, stated that his colleague, Mr. MAGOON, was absent by leave of the House.

Mr. PAGE stated that Mr. WOODBURN was absent by leave of the House, and that if present he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. FRYE stated that his colleague, Mr. BLAINE, was absent on account of sickness; that Mr. PLAISTED was absent by order of the House attending a committee, and that his other colleague, Mr. HALE, was absent on business.

Mr. VAN VORHES stated that his colleague, Mr. VANCE, was absent by leave of the House.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois, stated that he agreed to pair with Mr. TUCKER, but as he did not know how he would vote, he asked leave to record his vote in the affirmative.

Several MEMBERS, (on the democratic side.) Vote.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois, then voted in the affirmative.

Mr. CUTLER stated that his colleague, Mr. HARDENBERGH, was absent by leave of the House.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY stated that Mr. EVANS was absent by leave of the House, and that if present he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. McMAHON stated that his colleagues, Mr. WALLING and Mr. VANCE, were absent by leave of the House, and that if present they would vote in the affirmative.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. COOK. I move that the title of the bill stand as it is.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COOK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUBBELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. LORD. I have risen to move that the House proceed with the consideration of the bill relating to the Geneva award.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make this suggestion to the House: It is very important that the sundry civil appropriation bill should be disposed of to-morrow. I ask that by unanimous consent the House take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow morning for the consideration of that bill. It will then be in print.

Mr. KASSON. Several important committees will be in session to-morrow morning.

Mr. HOLMAN. There will, of course, be some debate on the bill before any action is taken.

Mr. KASSON. I do not object to the gentleman's proposition, on condition that no vote shall be taken until after the adjournment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX having resumed the chair.) The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the House take a recess till ten o'clock to-morrow morning for general debate on the sundary civil bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; for action on the bill.

Mr. KASSON. I object to that. As I have said, several important committees will be in session to-morrow morning. Notice has been given of a very important session of the Committee on Banking and Currency to-morrow. Members must be there, and they would not like to be absent during the consideration of the sundry civil bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Nothing will be accomplished unless the bill itself is taken up for consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I shall submit a motion.

REFORM SCHOOL IN THE DISTRICT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to make an announcement. By the sixteenth section of the act passed on the 3d of May, 1876, revising and amending the various acts establishing and relating to a reform school in the District of Columbia, it is enacted that two consulting trustees shall be appointed, namely, one Senator of the United States, by the presiding officer of the Senate, for the term of four years, and one member of the House of Representatives, by the Speaker thereof, for the term of two years. Under that provision of law, and with the consent and at the suggestion of the Speaker of the House, the Chair names Hon. A. E. STEVENSON, of Illinois, for that position.

SOUTH PASS OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. HEREFORD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, presented a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report by Major Cyrus B. Comstock, Corps of Engineers, United States Navy, relating to the South Pass improvements of the Mississippi River, and moved that it be printed and recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD BILL.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that a few days ago I announced that I would this day ask a vote on the bill (H. R. No. 3672) to amend the Pacific Railroad acts, so as to require the so-called Pacific Railroad Companies to create a sinking fund to pay the principal and interest of the subsidy bonds issued to them.

The Judiciary Committee this morning, or a majority of the committee, for reasons which they deemed satisfactory, directed that no vote should be asked on the bill until the 6th day of July. I deem it just to myself to say I do not concur in the expediency of that action of the committee; but of course I yield to it with entire respect for the majority who deemed this course advisable. It is proper to say one member of the committee who wishes to submit some views in opposition to the bill desired further time, and in a day or two more doubtless quite a number of members expect to start to Saint Louis. If the bill shall finally pass, it will save to the Government more than a sufficient sum to pay the soldiers the bounties so justly due them.

EXTRADITION TREATY WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House a message from the President of the United States, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

By the tenth article of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed in Washington on the 9th day of August, 1842, it was agreed that the two governments should, upon mutual requisitions respectively made, deliver up to justice all persons who, being charged with certain crimes therein enumerated, committed within the jurisdiction of either, should seek an asylum or be found within the territories of the other.

The only condition or limitation contained in the treaty to the reciprocal obligation thus to deliver up the fugitive was that it should be done only upon such evidence of criminality as, according to the laws of the place where the fugitive or person so charged should be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime or offense had there been committed.

In the month of February last a requisition was duly made, in pursuance of the provisions of the treaty, by this Government upon that of Great Britain for the surrender of one Ezra D. Winslow, charged with extensive forgeries and the utterance of forged paper, committed within the jurisdiction of the United States, who had sought an asylum, and was found within the territories of Her Britannic Majesty, and was apprehended in London. The evidence of the criminality of the fugitive was duly furnished and heard, and, being found sufficient to justify his apprehension and committment for trial, if the crimes had been committed in Great Britain, he was held and committed for extradition.

Her Majesty's government, however, did not deliver up the fugitive in accordance with the terms of the treaty, notwithstanding every requirement thereof had been met on the part of the United States, but, instead of surrendering the fugitive, demanded certain assurances or stipulations not mentioned in the treaty, but foreign to its provisions, as a condition of the performance by Great Britain of her obligations under the treaty.

In a recent communication to the House of Representatives and in answer to a call from that body for information on this case, I submitted the correspondence which has passed between the two governments with reference thereto. It will be found in Executive Document No. 173 of the House of Representatives of the present session, and I respectfully refer thereto for more detailed information bearing on the question.

It appears from the correspondence that the British government bases its refusal to surrender the fugitive and its demand for stipulations or assurances from this Government on the requirements of a purely domestic enactment of the British Parliament, passed in the year 1870.

This act was brought to the notice of this Government shortly after its enactment, and Her Majesty's government was advised that the United States understood it as giving continued effect to the existing engagements under the treaty of 1842 for the extradition of criminals; and, with this knowledge on its part and without dissent from the declared views of the United States as to the unchanged nature of the reciprocal rights and obligations of the two powers under the treaty, Great Britain has continued to make requisitions and to grant surrenders in numerous instances without suggestion that it was contemplated to depart from the practice under the treaty which has obtained for more than thirty years until now, for the first time, in this case of Winslow, it is assumed that under this act of Parliament Her Majesty may require a stipulation or agreement not provided for in the treaty as a condition to the observance by her government of its treaty obligations toward this country.

This I have felt it my duty emphatically to repel.

In addition to the case of Winslow, requisition was also made by this Government on that of Great Britain for the surrender of Charles J. Brent, also charged with forgery committed in the United States and found in Great Britain. The evidence of criminality was duly heard and the fugitive committed for extradition.

A similar stipulation to that demanded in Winslow's case was also asked in Brent's, and was likewise refused.

It is with extreme regret that I am now called upon to announce to you that Her Majesty's government has finally released both of these fugitives, Winslow and Brent, and set them at liberty, thus omitting to comply with the provisions and requirements of the treaty under which the extradition of fugitive criminals is made between the two governments.

The position thus taken by the British government, if adhered to, cannot but be regarded as the abrogation and annulment of the article of the treaty on extradition.

Under these circumstances it will not, in my judgment, comport with the dignity or self-respect of this Government to make demands upon that government for the surrender of fugitive criminals, nor to entertain any requisition of that character from that government under the treaty.

It will be a cause of deep regret if a treaty which has been thus far beneficial in its practical operation, which has worked so well and so efficiently, and which, notwithstanding the exciting and at times violent political disturbances of which both countries have been the scene during its existence, has given rise to no complaints on the part of either government against either its spirit or its provisions, should be abruptly terminated.

It has tended to the protection of society and to the general interests of both countries. Its violation or annulment would be a retrograde step in international intercourse.

I have been anxious and have made the effort to enlarge its scope and to make a new treaty which would be a still more efficient agent for the punishment and prevention of crime. At the same time I have felt it my duty to decline to entertain a proposition made by Great Britain, pending its refusal to execute the existing treaty, to amend it by practically conceding by treaty the identical conditions which that government demands under its act of Parliament. In addition to the impossibility of the United States entering upon negotiations under the menace of an intended violation or a refusal to execute the terms of an existing treaty, I deemed it inadvisable to treat of only the one amendment proposed by Great Britain while the United States desires an enlargement of the list of crimes for which extradition may be asked and other improvements which experience has shown might be embodied in a new treaty.

It is for the wisdom of Congress to determine whether the article of the treaty relating to extradition is to be any longer regarded as obligatory on the Government of the United States or as forming part of the supreme law of the land. Should the attitude of the British government remain unchanged, I shall not, without an expression of the wish of Congress that I should do so, take any action either in making or granting requisitions for the surrender of fugitive criminals under the treaty of 1842.

Respectfully submitted.

U. S. GRANT.

WASHINGTON, June 20, 1876.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the message of the President just read be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS UNDER ACT OF JULY 4, 1864.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent to offer for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit to the House a list of claims arising under the act of July 4, 1864, which have been examined and allowed since December, 7, 1875, by the proper accounting officers, and which have not been reported to Congress.

Mr. EDEN. Let the resolution be referred.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to say just one word in explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution now?

Mr. WHITE. I merely desire to say that the claims have all been allowed and that they are just.

Mr. O'BRIEN. What are they?

Mr. WHITE. They are claims which have been allowed by the Treasury Department for quartermaster's stores and little matters of that sort, for sums varying from ten dollars to two or three hundred dollars each, which will not be reported before the end of the fiscal year unless we pass a resolution of that kind, and there can be no appropriation till they are reported. The object of the resolution is to require them to be reported.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Are these the claims referred to in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. WHITE. No, sir; these are additional claims which have been allowed since the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. They have been allowed since the 7th of December last.

Mr. O'BRIEN. There is no objection to the resolution.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury dated March 24, and printed as an executive document, containing all the items allowed up to that date.

Mr. LAWRENCE. But others have been allowed since. The law requires the Secretary of the Treasury to make a report to Congress of claims allowed, and Congress makes an appropriation to pay for them. This resolution is entirely right.

Mr. KASSON. Before the question is taken on the motion for a recess, I wish to say that it has been suggested that a session of the House necessarily vacates appointments for the meeting of committees which have not leave to sit during the sessions of the House. That being so, I have no reason to insist on my objection to a recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question before the House is not the motion for a recess, but the resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WHITE.]

The question being taken, Mr. WHITE's resolution was adopted.

FIDELIO L. HUNT.

Mr. LAMAR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3750) for the relief of Fidelio L. Hunt, late collector of internal revenue in the second district of Mississippi; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

EXCHANGE OF UNITED STATES BONDS.

Mr. MUTCHLER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3751) authorizing the exchange of registered bonds for coupon bonds; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

EXPENDITURES ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. POPPLETON. I desire the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, to enable a subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings to take testimony.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings be, and is hereby, authorized to send a subcommittee of said committee to New York City and such other places as the commtttee may deem proper and necessary for the purpose of taking testimony in matters of expenditures on public buildings in said city and elsewhere, and that said subcommittee have power to send for persons and papers and employ a stenographer, and the chairman of such subcommittee shall have power to administer oaths.

Mr. KASSON. Is that resolution reported from the committee?

Mr. POPPLETON. Yes, sir.

Mr. KASSON. And it entitles the subcommittee to go anywhere, to New York or any other city?

Mr. POPPLETON. Yes; but especially to New York.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. POPPLETON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TAX ON NOTES OF STATE BANKS.

Mr. RIDDLE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3752) to repeal section 3412 of the Revised Statutes, which imposes a 10 per cent. tax on the notes of State banks and State banking associations used for circulation and paid out by them; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

FRUIT BRANDY.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3753) authorizing the growers of fruit to manufacture the same into brandy under certain limitations; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and, with the accompanying memorial, ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL DUNNELL.

Mr. BURLEIGH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3754) for the relief of Samuel Dunnell, late a second lieutenant in Company C, Twenty-seventh Regiment Maine Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FRANCIS ARMSTRONG.

Mr. GLOVER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 1977) for the relief of Francis Armstrong; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. GLOVER also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of R. N. Hood; and the same was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

NICHOLAS DOWLING.

Mr. CAULFIELD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3755) granting a pension to Nicholas Dowling; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY A. BATEMAN.

Mr. LE MOYNE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3756) for the relief of Henry A. Bateman; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MASTERS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. VAN VORHES, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3757) to range the members of the class of 1870, graduates of the United States Naval Academy, now serving in the Navy, as masters on the masters' list; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RAILWAY FROM LAKE MICHIGAN TO THE ATLANTIC.

Mr. HAYMOND, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3758) chartering a freight and passenger railway from Lake Michigan to the southwest Atlantic seaboard; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Sally E. Herrick, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BEEBE was granted leave of absence for ten days on account of important business.

Mr. SPENCER was granted an extension of his leave of absence until the 26th instant on account of illness.

Mr. LAWRENCE was granted leave of absence for ten days on account of important business.

Mr. HURD was granted leave of absence for two weeks.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Delaware, was granted leave of absence for two weeks.

The question was then taken on Mr. HUBBELL's motion, and it was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BANNING: The petition of D. W. Bliss, president, and James B. Carter, corresponding secretary, of the Soldiers and Sailors' National Beneficial Association, presenting the names of 1,060 of the members of said association asking for the passage of a bill for the equalization of bounties to the soldiers and sailors of the late war, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CLARKE, of Kentucky: The petition of Samuel T. Jones, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COX: The petition of T. S. Stewart, for a pension, to the same committee.

By Mr. FINLEY: The petition of Mary Falaney, widow of Fernando Falaney, a soldier of the Florida Indian war of 1837 and 1838, for a pension, to the same committee.

By Mr. HENKLE: Resolutions of the mayor and city council of Baltimore, favoring the erection of a light-house on the White Rocks in the Patapsco River, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HUNTON: The petition of Mrs. Sidney A. Harrison, that the pension granted to her late husband may be continued to herself, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

By Mr. JENKS: The petition of Dr. S. S. Christy, for office rent, fuel, subsisting recruits, and for services rendered as recruiting agent for the Eighteenth Regiment United States Army, to the Committee on War Claims.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 21, 1876.

Prayer by Rev. P. H. BURGHENETT, of Washington, District of Columbia.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. MORTON, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

EXTRADITION TREATY WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which, on motion of Mr. MORTON, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

By the tenth article of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed in Washington on the 9th day of August, 1842, it was agreed that the two governments should, upon mutual requisitions respectively made, deliver up to justice all persons who, being charged with certain crimes therein enumerated, committed within the jurisdiction of either, should seek an asylum or be found within the territories of the other.

The only condition or limitation contained in the treaty to the reciprocal obligation thus to deliver up the fugitive was that it should be done only upon such evidence of criminality as, according to the laws of the place where the fugitive or person so charged should be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime or offense had there been committed.

In the month of February last a requisition was duly made, in pursuance of the provisions of the treaty, by this Government upon that of Great Britain for the surrender of one Ezra D. Winslow, charged with extensive forgeries and the uttering of forged paper, committed within the jurisdiction of the United States, who had sought an asylum, and was found within the territories of Her Britannic Majesty, and was apprehended in London. The evidence of the criminality of the fugitive was duly furnished and heard, and, being found sufficient to justify his apprehension and commitment for trial, if the crimes had been committed in Great Britain, he was held and committed for extradition.

Her Majesty's government, however, did not deliver up the fugitive in accordance with the terms of the treaty, notwithstanding every requirement thereof had been met on the part of the United States, but, instead of surrendering the fugitive, demanded certain assurances or stipulations not mentioned in the treaty, but foreign to its provisions, as a condition of the performance by Great Britain of her obligations under the treaty.

In a recent communication to the House of Representatives and in answer to a call from that body for information on this case, I submitted the correspondence which has passed between the two governments with reference thereto. It will be found in Executive Document No. 73 of the House of Representatives of the present session, and I respectfully refer thereto for more detailed information bearing on the question.

It appears from the correspondence that the British government bases its refusal to surrender the fugitive and its demand for stipulations or assurances from this Government on the requirements of a purely domestic enactment of the British Parliament, passed in the year 1870.

This act was brought to the notice of this Government shortly after its enactment, and Her Majesty's government was advised that the United States understood it as giving continued effect to the existing engagements under the treaty of 1842 for the extradition of criminals; and, with this knowledge on its part and without dissent from the declared views of the United States as to the unchanged nature of the reciprocal rights and obligations of the two powers under the treaty, Great Britain has continued to make requisitions and to grant surrenders in numerous instances without suggestion that it was contemplated to depart from the practice under the treaty which has obtained for more than thirty years until now, for the first time, in this case of Winslow, it is assumed that under this act of Parliament Her Majesty may require a stipulation or agreement not provided for in the treaty as a condition to the observance by her government of its treaty obligations toward this country.

This I have felt it my duty emphatically to repel.

In addition to the case of Winslow, requisition was also made by this Government on that of Great Britain for the surrender of Charles J. Brent, also charged with forgery committed in the United States and found in Great Britain. The evidence of criminality was duly heard and the fugitive committed for extradition.

A similar stipulation to that demanded in Winslow's case was also asked in Brent's, and was likewise refused.

It is with extreme regret that I am now called upon to announce to you that Her Majesty's government has finally released both of these fugitives, Winslow and Brent, and set them at liberty, thus omitting to comply with the provisions and requirements of the treaty under which the extradition of fugitive criminals is made between the two governments.

The position thus taken by the British government, if adhered to, cannot but be regarded as the abrogation and annulment of the article of the treaty on extradition.

Under these circumstances it will not, in my judgment, comport with the dignity or self-respect of this Government to make demands upon that government for the surrender of fugitive criminals, nor to entertain any requisition of that character from that government under the treaty.

It will be a cause of deep regret if a treaty which has been thus far beneficial in its practical operation, which has worked so well and so efficiently, and which, notwithstanding the exciting and at times violent political disturbances of which both countries have been the scene during its existence, has given rise to no complaints on the part of either government against either its spirit or its provisions, should be abruptly terminated.

It has tended to the protection of society and to the general interests of both countries. Its violation or annulment would be a retrograde step in international intercourse.

I have been anxious and have made the effort to enlarge its scope and to make a new treaty which would be a still more efficient agent for the punishment and prevention of crime. At the same time I have felt it my duty to decline to entertain a proposition made by Great Britain, pending its refusal to execute the existing treaty, to amend it by practically conceding by treaty the identical conditions which that government demands under its act of Parliament. In addition to the impossibility of the United States entering upon negotiations under the menace of an intended violation or a refusal to execute the terms of an existing treaty, I deemed it inadvisable to treat of only the one amendment proposed by Great Britain while the United States desires an enlargement of the list of crimes for which extradition may be asked, and other improvements which experience has shown might be embodied in a new treaty.

It is for the wisdom of Congress to determine whether the article of the treaty relating to extradition is to be any longer regarded as obligatory on the Government of the United States or as forming part of the supreme law of the land. Should the attitude of the British government remain unchanged, I shall not, without an expression of the wish of Congress that I should do so, take any action either in making or granting requisitions for the surrender of fugitive criminals under the treaty of 1842.

Respectfully submitted.

U. S. GRANT.

WASHINGTON, June 20, 1876.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Adjutant-General in the matter of the proposed relinquishment of the garden tract at Camp Verde, Arizona Territory, and recommending the passage of an act authorizing the relinquishment of the same to the custody and control of the Secretary of the Interior for disposition under the public land laws; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. No. 2043) to improve the law in relation to dower in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 3411) authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue;

A bill (H. R. No. 3740) providing for the recording of deeds, mortgages, and other conveyances affecting real estate in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 3741) amending an act incorporating the proprietors of Glenwood Cemetery;

A bill (H. R. No. 3745) to prevent the sale and use of adulterated and explosive illuminating oils and other fluids in the District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 100) providing a commission to frame a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The bill (H. R. No. 1539) to authorize the construction of a ponton bridge across the Mississippi River from some feasible point in Buffalo County, in the State of Wisconsin, to some feasible point in Winona County, in the State of Minnesota, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. No. 3717) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DAWES presented the petition of George W. Hubbard and W. E. Conant, of Brooklyn, New York, praying for the extension of their patent for an improvement in double-acting steam-engines; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. MERRIMON. I present the petition of Reni E. de Russy, late first lieutenant Second Artillery, accompanied by many papers in support of it, praying that Congress take such action as may lead to his re-appointment to his former position with benefits of and credits for length of service as a commissioned officer in the Army prior to November 16, 1874. I move that the petition and papers be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented the petition of the Pennsylvania Company for Insurance on Lives and Granting Annuities, executors and trustees of the estate of Thomas McA. Fleming, deceased, praying to have refunded to the estate of the decedent the amount of certain moneys alleged to have been captured by United States forces at New Orleans during the late war, and covered into the Treasury by order of General B. F. Butler; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CLAYTON presented a petition of the mayor and common council of Fort Smith, Arkansas, praying an appropriation for the improvement of the Arkansas River at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WRIGHT. The Committee on Claims, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 435) for the relief of William S. Robinson, of Malden, Massachusetts, have instructed me to report it with an amendment. I will state that this bill was at one time reported to the Senate and its indefinite postponement recommended by the committee. It was recommitted upon evidence, and, upon an examination of that evidence, the committee agree to report it back and recommend its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. WRIGHT. The same committee have had under consideration the petition of Mrs. Mary Walsh, praying compensation for services rendered by her husband, Redmond Walsh, as plumber and gas-fitter at the Government Insane Asylum, Washington, District of Columbia, from August 1, 1867, to May 1, 1875, and also for services as a private in the Marine Corps, United States Navy, from April 13, 1858, to April 13, 1876. The committee find upon an examination of this petition that it is not sworn to and there is no evidence whatever accompanying it. The claim itself seems to be most extraordinary; and we recommend that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the claim be rejected.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. The same committee, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. No. 37) for the relief of William H. Nessle, after a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed, have had it again under consideration. They have examined the additional evidence, adhere to their former recommendation, and again ask the Senate to concur in the order that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CAPERTON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of H. H. Mathis, of Saint Francis County, Arkansas, praying compensation for cotton taken and appropriated by United States troops during the late war, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 931) for the relief of H. H. Mathis, of Arkansas.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 781) for the relief of Margaret Ireland, widow of Amos Ireland, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SARGENT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of David De Haven, praying compensation for the loss of the steamer Alonzo Child, taken possession of by the rebel forces at Memphis, Tennessee, in May, 1862, and subsequently taken by the United States forces and placed in the naval service of the United States, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 932) for the relief of David De Haven.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOGY, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 623) for the relief of settlers on certain lands in the State of California, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 97) directing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue certificate of relocation for six hundred and forty acres of land in the territory of Missouri to legal representatives of Samuel Ware, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CONOVER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 759) authorizing the President to appoint Henry Hoover a naval constructor in the United States Navy, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 299) to amend section 1588 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the pay of medical and pay directors, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department, to report it back and ask that it be postponed until the Thursday after the first Monday in December next.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask that the bill may lie on the table, and that it be not acted upon at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks that the bill lie on the table for the present. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the bill being passed over for the moment; but it ought to be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection; and the bill will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas S. Whitenack, praying an extension of his patent for an improvement in rakes for harvesters, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Julius A. Pickering, praying an extension of patent No. 23532, for attaching boot-straps, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 280) for the relief of Jacob A. Conover, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2952) authorizing the Commissioner of Patents to rehear the application of Stephen V. Benét for patent for cartridges, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 722) for the relief of Charles F. Chandler, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Ezra G. Cone, praying for the extension of his patent on sleigh-bells, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 933) for the relief of Ezra G. Cone.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 419) for the relief of William H. Ward, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 383) for the relief of Ingalls B. Andrews, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRAGIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Connecticut, in relation to the navy-yard near New London, Connecticut, asking for an appropriation to continue the work now in progress thereat, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of New York, in regard to the navy-yard at New London, Connecticut, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 340) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain officers of the Navy who were dropped, furloughed, or retired under the act of February 28, 1855," approved January 30, 1875, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Captain William Chandler, formerly an officer in the Navy, praying for the difference of pay between "leave" pay of lieutenant and that of commander from September 14, 1855, to December 22, 1858, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Lieutenant Samuel C. Barney, United States Navy, praying to be restored to the retired list of the Navy, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of H. L. Gamble, widow of the late Lieutenant John Gamble, United States Marine Corps, praying compensation for the capture by her husband during the war of 1812 of the vessel Seringapatam, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 597) for the relief of Anderson J. Smith, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2404) for the relief of John S. Dickson, late captain of paroled prisoners, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2017) for the relief of Lizzie Irons, sister of Lieutenant Joseph F. Irons, late of the First United States Cavalry, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2121) to authorize commissioned officers of the Army to make deposits under the act of May 15, 1872, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1402) for the relief of Henry E. Wilkinson, late first lieutenant of Company I, Ninety-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, reported it without amendment, the committee adopting the report of the House committee.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following petitions, memorial, and resolution, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to:

The petition of Andrew Lutz, late major of the Eighth New York Volunteers, praying to be allowed the pay due him as such officer from August 1, 1861, to November 22, 1861;

The petition of James H. Johnson, of Roane County, Tennessee, late major of the Eleventh Regiment of Tennessee Cavalry, praying reimbursement of certain moneys expended by him in recruiting and organizing said regiment;

A memorial of the city council of Alexandria, Virginia, in relation to the proposed construction of a monument at Yorktown, Virginia, commemorative of the closing battle of the revolutionary war; and

A resolution of the Legislature of Kansas against any reduction of the Army and in favor of stationing troops on the frontier to protect settlers from anticipated incursions and depredations of the Sioux and other tribes of Indians.

Mr. LOGAN. I am also directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the bill (S. No. 165) for the relief of Michael W. Brock, of Meigs County, Tennessee, late a private of Company D, Tenth Tennessee Volunteers, together with the message of the President of the United States returning the bill with his objections thereto, to ask to be discharged from its further consideration; and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims. The bill seems to have been reported from the Committee on Claims originally, but was referred, with the veto message of the President, to the Military Committee. I move that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from their further consideration, and that the bill and message be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WRIGHT. My impression is that the report was originally made by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not so understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3200) to change the name of the steambarge Dolphin, of Clayton, New York, reported it without amendment.

CHANGE OF NAME OF STEAMER.

Mr. CONKLING. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2824) to change the name of the steamboat Paragon, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, have had the same under consideration and directed me to report it without amendment.

Mr. BOGY. I hope that bill will be taken up at once. It will lead to no opposition, and it is very important that it should pass. The steamer is now waiting for the change of name, in the harbor of Saint Louis. The bill will meet with no opposition and will take no time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the steamboat Paragon, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, to that of E. O. Stanard.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. INGALLS. If there is no further morning business, I move the remainder of the morning hour be devoted to unobjected cases on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will entertain morning business prior to the motion of the Senator from Kansas. Bills and resolutions are now in order.

SEIZURE OF PRIVATE DISPATCHES.

Mr. MORTON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be instructed to inquire what laws, if any, protect the inviolability of private dispatches sent by magnetic telegraph, and what legislation is necessary to prevent the seizure of such dispatches by unauthorized or irresponsible persons; and to report by bill or otherwise.

P. B. S. PINCHBACK.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to give notice that on next Monday morning, after the morning business and in the morning hour, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution providing for the compensation of Mr. P. B. S. Pinchback, late a contestant for a seat in the Senate.

CONFERENCE AS TO GOLD AND SILVER.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to take up the joint resolution (S. R. No. 16) to authorize the President to appoint commissioners to attend our international conference upon the subject of the relative values of gold and silver.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection to taking up the resolution if it does not give rise to debate. Otherwise, I shall object to its consideration and move to take up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it is to give rise to debate, I shall not ask that it be considered now.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides that should the government of one or more countries invite a conference or convention to consider the important change which has recently occurred in the relative values of gold and silver, and the adoption of international measures for the removal of embarrassments arising therefrom, the President of the United States is authorized to appoint three properly qualified persons as commissioners to attend such conference or convention.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to call up a bill if the Senator from Minnesota will give way. It will take but a moment to pass it, I think.

Mr. WINDOM. I should be very much gratified to yield to the Senator; but when I have stated to the Senator why I cannot do so, I am sure he will appreciate it. Two or three Senators left the Senate Chamber a moment ago, stating that if no bills would be called up they would go out for a few moments. I said that so far as I was concerned I would not consent that the Indian bill should be displaced by other business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] has priority. The Senator from Kansas has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of unobjected cases.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope the Senate will continue the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. We can finish it, I think, in a short time. Certainly we should not displace it for the Calendar at present.

Mr. INGALLS. There would be no displacement of the regular appropriation bill by the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar. That bill does not come up in order until the expiration of the morning hour at one o'clock. I therefore hope that the Senator from Minnesota will allow us for the next thirty minutes to go on with the Calendar and see if we cannot transact some business of a private nature.

Mr. WINDOM. I think the appropriation bills are more pressing than the Calendar. There is another appropriation bill reported and ready for action. The Indian bill ought to be disposed of at the earliest possible moment. I hope the Senate will not take up the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of unobjected cases.

The motion was not agreed to.

ISSUE OF SILVER COIN.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yesterday I reported a House joint resolution which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] desired time to consider. I am urged, I may say, to bring it to the attention of the Senate in order to facilitate the exchange and the payment out of silver coin. I think the matter is of so pressing and important a nature that I shall again venture to ask the attention of the Senate to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield for that purpose?

Mr. WINDOM. I yield if it does not give rise to debate.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 109) for the issue of silver coin. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury, under such limits and regulations as will best secure a just and fair distribution of the same through the country, may issue the silver coin now in the Treasury to an amount not exceeding $10,000,000, in exchange for an equal amount of legal-tender notes; and the notes so received in exchange are to be kept as a special fund, separate and apart from all other money in the Treasury, and be re-issued only upon the retirement and destruction of a like sum of fractional currency received at the Treasury in payment of dues to the United States; and the fractional currency, when so substituted, is to be destroyed and held as part of the sinking fund, as provided in the act approved April 17, 1876.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, in line 5 to strike out the word "now" after "coin;" so as to read:

May issue the silver coin in the Treasury to an amount not exceeding $10,000,000, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have here a telegram which will explain an amendment which I will propose and the provision of which has already been adopted, I think, in both Houses. I will offer the amendment myself, as I have not had time to consult the Committee on Finance; and as it has already passed both Houses it will no doubt be assented to. It is urged in the Treasury Department that the condition of the trade-dollar should also be defined in this resolution, and as the resolution is in its last stages it is better that it should be put on here. I move to insert at the end of the resolution the following:

SEC. 2. That the trade-dollar shall not hereafter be a legal tender; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to limit, from time to time, the coinage thereof to such an amount as he may deem sufficient to meet the export demand for the same.

This provision has already been adopted in different bills by the two Houses, but is not embraced in this resolution. I therefore move to add these words as an additional section. It is to relieve a condition of embarrassment in California.

Mr. HOWE. What is the objection to the trade-dollar being made a legal tender?

Mr. SHERMAN. The objection is that it is now a legal tender for gold contracts in California, and it being of less intrinsic value than gold the result is to create an embarrassment. The Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] can explain it better than I can. It is a matter of local interest there. Both Houses have already acted on the proposition favorably.

Mr. WINDOM. If the resolution is to give rise to debate I must ask for the regular order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will withdraw the amendment if it takes time.

Mr. SARGENT. I trust not.

Mr. HOWE. If I can have a little information on that point it is all I want.

Mr. SARGENT. The trade-dollar is now at a greater discount than the ordinary subsidiary silver coinage, although it is intrinsically of greater value. It is extremely unpopular. It is simply worth ninety cents in gold, being taken at that rate, and dealers refuse to take it for more. Subsidiary silver coin is worth some ninety-three or ninety-four cents, ninety-five I believe at the present time, on the Pacific coast. There is a general protest against this trade-dollar. It was originally intended simply for export to oust the Mexican dollar in the China market.

Mr. HOWE. The trade-dollar contains four hundred and twenty grains of silver.

Mr. SARGENT. It is worth more than the two half-dollars of subsidiary coinage, and yet it is at greater discount. By some law of trade, difficult to be explained perhaps—I cannot say that I entirely understand it—it has fallen in discount below the amount of the subsidiary coinage. It is received with extreme disfavor by all parties on the Pacific coast. This amendment confines it to its original purpose, that is, for export, to compete with and drive out the Mexican dollar in our trade with China. I trust there will be no objection to the amendment, believing it to be a great relief to my section.

Mr. HOWE. I am not going to make any objection; but we have a bill before us which proposes to make a dollar with four hundred and twelve and a half grains a legal tender. Here is a resolution which we are to pass at the same session which is to say that a dollar of four hundred and twenty grains of silver is not a legal tender. It is said there is some occult law of trade which justifies the two measures.

Mr. SHERMAN. I explained the whole of that, and I will not enter into an explanation again, because it is a matter of indifference to me. It is possible the silver bill will not pass, and it is important that this amendment should be adopted to relieve the difficulty in California; but, if the Senator objects to it and has any doubt about it, I will withdraw the amendment, as time is important.

Mr. HOWE. I am not going to make any objection. I take the statement of the Senator from California to be true, that there is some law of trade by which this anomaly can be explained, but I declare, if I was to be held responsible for this measure, I think I should not consent to it until I knew what that law of trade was.

Mr. SARGENT. The fact exists.

Mr. BOOTH. I think I can suggest a possible solution of that law of trade which seems to be so mysterious, and that is that only a limited amount of subsidiary silver can be issued and coined, while the amount of trade-dollars which can be issued is unlimited. It depends altogether upon the demand. That demand is for export.

Mr. SHERMAN. I also explained that this trade-dollar is issued at the demand of the owners of bullion who can bring it in and get trade-dollars for the bullion; but the subsidiary coin is only issued by the Government of the United States and the amount is within its control. But I do not want to go into that. If the Senator from Wisconsin does not object, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. HOWE. I hardly think the explanation is satisfactory, but I shall not object.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ought to say that my own impression is—and I think that is the opinion of the committee—that the amount ought to be increased. I think ten millions is not sufficient, especially if we should fail to pass the silver bill at this session. I call attention to the fact now. I think the amount ought to be increased to twenty millions, and if the Senate will agree to it unanimously I believe the House will concur, because I fear that if we fail to pass the silver bill at this session there may be a scarcity of change on account of the difficulty of getting it out. It is for the Senate to say whether or not under all the circumstances we had better increase the amount to twenty millions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator make that motion?

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to amend by increasing the amount from ten to twenty millions.

Mr. SARGENT. I desire to object to an increase of the amount. At best it is an experiment. I have some hesitation in voting for the joint resolution even in its present shape. I shall certainly wish to be heard if it be insisted that the amount be raised to $20,000,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well, I withdraw the amendment, for I do not want to delay the matter.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would ask the Senator from Ohio whether there was not an amendment that a like amount of United States notes were to be withdrawn?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a part of the text of the resolution. This is a House resolution to facilitate the issue of change; it is not the silver bill at all. I think though the Senator from California will regret that he objected to increasing the amount, because we may have a real difficulty about change before next December. I wish to place on record my conviction that the amount ought to be increased, and I have no doubt that the House would agree to it; but still I do not wish to press it.

Mr. SARGENT. If this were simply a measure operating on this side of the Rocky Mountains, I would not object at all; but the necessary effect of it is to send an enormous quantity of silver to the Pacific coast and drown out our gold currency; but perhaps the $10,000,000 may be absorbed on this side. I am willing to consent to that; but I object to increasing the amount.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will submit the amendment for $20,000,000, and let us take the vote.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I hope not. I hope the Senator from Ohio will not go so far as that. It is important that this measure should pass; but, as the Senator from California has suggested, it is an experiment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw the amendment; but at the same time I must express my conviction, which I place on the record, that it is a mistake for this Congress to adjourn without issuing more than $10,000,000.

Mr. MORTON. I shall not oppose the adoption of this resolution in its present form, although I have very great doubt about the propriety of it. If I remember correctly the figures that were submitted to the Senate some days ago, the present subsidiary coin, which it is now proposed to issue to the amount of $10,000,000 in lieu of greenbacks, is worth about eighty-four cents on the dollar. It was worth at that time about eighty-four and three-eighths cents; it is now worth about eighty-four cents on the dollar. It looks a good deal like saying to the world that our greenbacks to-day are only worth eighty-four cents on the dollar, and that we offer to take them up and redeem them at that price.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a purely voluntary process.

Mr. CONKLING. This measure having been reported yesterday, in order I suppose to be printed, is not on my desk, and other Senators tell me it is not on theirs. I ask that the joint resolution be reported as it will stand if the amendments made in Committee of the Whole be agreed to—a request which I would not make if I could read the joint resolution myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read as amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. The joint resolution as amended by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole reads as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, under such limits and regulations as will best secure a just and fair distribution of the same through the country, may issue the silver coin in the Treasury to an amount not exceeding $10,000,000, in exchange for an equal amount of legal-tender notes; and the notes so received in exchange shall be kept as a special fund, separate and apart from all other money in the Treasury, and be re-issued only upon the retirement and destruction of a like sum of fractional currency received at the Treasury in payment of dues to the United States; and said fractional currency, when so substituted, shall be destroyed and held as part of the sinking fund, as provided in the act approved April 17, 1876.

SEC. 2. That the trade-dollar shall not hereafter be a legal tender, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to limit from time to time the coinage thereof to such an amount as he may deem sufficient to meet the export demand for the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 552. If it is likely to give rise to any debate, I will not insist on it now.

Mr. WINDOM. The morning hour has so near expired, and I have already, contrary to my expectation, yielded, that I will not insist. The Senator may ask unanimous consent, and if there is no debate I will not insist on calling up the unfinished business at this moment.

Mr. PADDOCK. The provisions of this bill are so important and equitable that I think it will commend itself, on its reading, to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska to take up the bill (S. No. 552) to restore the franking privilege.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. KERNAN. It is quite obvious that this bill cannot pass without examination and debate. I object to taking it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. An executive session is important for a few moments.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 58) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union;

A bill (H. R. No. 844) relating to land patents;

A bill (H. R. No. 865) to provide for the appointment of additional circuit-court commissioners, and to prevent oppression;

A bill (H. R. No. 3150) in relation to judgment liens;

A bill (H. R. No. 3168) relating to partition of real estate in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 3746) relating to the terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States in and for the district of Iowa;

A bill (H. R. No. 3747) to secure service of process in the United States courts in certain cases; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3748) to provide for the redemption of real estate sold under judgments and decrees in the courts of the United States.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, the pending question being on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, to strike out section 3, in the following words:

SEC. 3. That the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby abolished and the salary heretofore paid to such officer shall cease, and the offices of superintendents of Indian affairs, clerks to the same, of agents and special agents, interpreters, inspectors, and all other employés of the Indian Bureau are hereby abolished; and the salary heretofore paid to such officers respectively shall cease, and the duties now intrusted to, and performed by, said officers, of every kind and description, shall be performed by officers, soldiers, and employés of the Army, under the direction of the Secretary of War; and they shall receive no additional pay by reason of the performance of the duties aforenamed thus transferred to them, other than the pay they may receive as officers and employés of the Army; and the Secretary of War shall assign them their duties in connection with the supervision, control, and management of Indian Affairs, under such regulations as the President may prescribe: Provided, That the execution of all laws and parts of laws applicable to the management and control of Indian affairs and of matters arising out of Indian relations is hereby transferred to, and placed under, the control of the Secretary of War, who is hereby empowered to, and shall, exercise the same authority in the control of all Indian affairs heretofore had by the Secretary of the Interior; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize an increase in the number, rank, pay, or allowances of officers of the Army in excess of that now provided by law, and its provisions shall be applicable to officers on the retired list of the Army, who, when on such duty, shall receive full pay and allowance of the rank in the regular Army held by them at their retirement, as prescribed by law for officers on the active list.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the five-minute rule be applied to debate on this bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope the rule will not be applied. I think it would be unjust, considering the fact that the debate has already continued for a considerable time and some Senators who are opposed to the transfer have occupied hours in consideration of the subject, now to apply the five-minute rule. The subject is one of very great importance, as the Senator himself admits, and I am confident he does not wish to repress debate.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not, but the debate on the bill has extended over some twelve hours, eight hours at least on this question. I wish to test the sense of the Senate as to whether they desire the five-minute rule applied to the bill. There has been about an equal amount of debate on each side, I think.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I hope that the five-minute rule will not be applied to this bill, and especially that section of the bill which proposes a transfer of the charge of Indian affairs to the War Department. That is a very important matter, one affecting not only the interests of the Indian, but affecting very seriously the interests of the country as to the expenditures of money for the Indian service, and it ought not to be disposed of under a debate of five minutes. It is a matter with which I am very little acquainted, and I do not expect to occupy any time on the subject; but there are gentlemen here, and especially gentlemen from the West, who are acquainted with the Indian service, who desire to be heard; and we who have to vote upon the question and are not so well acquainted would be glad to hear all we can in reference to that question. I hope, therefore, the five-minute rule will not be applied.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair reminds Senators that debate is not in order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota, that the Senate apply the five-minute rule to this bill.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 17, noes 21.

Mr. WINDOM. I will not call for the yeas and nays now, but will renew the request for the five-minute rule if the debate seems likely to run to any great length.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, at the adjournment last night I was calling the attention of the Senate to the fact that a very large portion of the amount appropriated by the bill under consideration is required by treaty stipulations entered into in 1867 and 1868 by means of a commission appointed under an act of Congress, of which commission four distinguished generals of the Army were members. I stated that I believed under the several treaties proposed by that commission nearly two and a half millions of the present appropriation bill are required. I have examined more carefully and find that I made an overstatement of the amount. The appropriations in this bill under the several treaties of 1867 and 1868 amount in the aggregate to about two millions and a quarter, or, in accurate figures, $2,265,000.

I stated then that I did not complain of the provisions of these treaties, but I referred to the fact that at that time, fresh as we were from a long and protracted Indian war on our borders, the generals of the Army believed that it was cheaper and better to enter into relations with those Indians whereby we should provide them with clothing and subsistence rather than to continue and procrastinate hostilities with them.

It was suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] in debate yesterday that all the Indian agents, or most of them, are dishonest. I cannot believe that that statement is true in any large sense; but, if it be true, I do not see that a transfer of the service to the War Department is likely to effect a change. Here let me call attention to some of the circumstances surrounding the appointment of Indian agents under what is known as the President's policy. It will be remembered by all that for many years the appointments of Indian agents were under the control of political partisans. In the report to which I called attention yesterday, made by General Sherman and others, especial attention was called to the fact that the agents were political appointees, and that much of the trouble and difficulty we had encountered had originated from that circumstance. The President of the United States, General Grant, when he came into office in 1869, in accordance with the recommendation of this commission, removed every Indian agent I believe then in office and substituted for the ordinary agents appointed under the civil authority Army officers. Perhaps in saying this I ought to except the State of Nebraska and perhaps a portion of the State of Kansas, which were then under the control of Indian agents appointed by the Society of Friends; but all the other agents were removed and Army officers substituted in their stead.

I believe by an act passed in 1870 on an appropriation bill, about July 15 of that year, Army officers were prohibited from exercising civil functions, so that again at that time all the Army officers who had been assigned to these civil duties were required to return to their commands. The President of the United States—and I want to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri particularly to this fact—withdrew from the republican party, who had control as a matter of fact over the offices of the country or were entitled to such control, the appointments of Indian agents, and placed them absolutely in the control of the religious denominations of the country; and from that time to the present no person except connected with those religious associations has ever recommended an Indian agent, nor has an Indian agent, to my knowledge, been appointed except upon the recommendation of the religious societies of the country. If, then, any frauds have been committed by these Indian agents (and I have not yet observed that frauds have been committed) since this policy was adopted by the President of the United States, it certainly is not the fault of any political party in this country; it is the fault of the great religious element of the country, which has had absolute control over these appointments during this period of time. But it is a fact that Indian agents have frequently been changed, and whenever they have been changed the religious societies have been called upon to recommend others instead of the Indian agents removed from any cause.

It may be that we can adopt a better policy in reference to the civilization of the Indians than to place them absolutely in the control of the great religious denominations of the country; and the President has made no distinction between the religious denominations. He has given the Methodists, the Baptists, the Congregationalists, the Catholics, and all the great religious denominations of the country their proper control of the various tribes of Indians. I submit to the Senator, therefore, that it is hardly fair to charge upon all these religious denominations that the appointments they have recommended have been without exception dishonest, and that men have been appointed who, without exception, have been guilty of fraud.

Now, it is proposed to change the entire character of our Indian policy and substitute for these agents Army officers. I think I have as high respect for the Army of the United States as any Senator on this floor. I have, I think, as much faith in the integrity of its officers as any Senator on this floor. I believe they are men of honor and of integrity; but I do not believe that their occupation is such as will enable them to faithfully discharge the duties of Indian agents, provided the object of the Government is to civilize the Indians and to make them self-supporting; and that is the great object and aim of our Government. In the nature of things it must be so. We are expending now some $2,000,000 annually in the subsistence of Indians. Are we to continue that forever, or are we to perfect a policy which will result finally in self-support on the part of the Indians? That is the only true policy, and we cannot succeed unless we teach them the arts of agriculture; and I submit that Army officers are not the persons to engage in this class of duties. They will not do it; they cannot do it from the very nature of their employment.

Take the Sioux Nation, if you please. By the treaty of 1868 they have been placed upon a reservation, a reservation which, in my judgment, is not fitted for their support; yet they are there. We say to them, "You must remain upon this reservation." There is no game there. They have no opportunity of self-support. The country is not suited to agriculture. Now, what shall they do? We say to them, "You must remain upon the reservation in accordance with the provisions of the treaty." The only thing left for us is to subsist them, and we have appropriated from year to year from a million to a million and a half of dollars for the subsistence of these tribes since 1869; and this appropriation bill provides a million of dollars for the subsistence of these Indians.

Now, Mr. President, it seems to me that it is the duty of Congress to provide some method whereby the Indians can be made self-supporting and self-sustaining. Many of the Indians in the Indian Territory are already so; others are rapidly becoming so under the present policy. Is that all to be reversed, and are we to rule the Indians wholly and solely by means of the Army, because that is the proposition that is presented to us in the third section of the bill now before us? It is a proposition to abdicate all the policies which have hitherto been adopted for the purpose of making the Indians self-supporting, and to place them absolutely under the control of Army officers and the United States Army. We have a great many treaty stipulations with Indians providing that we shall furnish them with carpenters, and blacksmiths, and saw-mills, and teachers, and agricultural implements; and yet all these provisions are absolutely ignored by the third section of this bill; no provision whatever is made for them, and no means to carry out these several treaty stipulations is provided. I submit that we cannot afford to enter upon a policy of this character.

It was said yesterday by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] and also by the Senator from Texas, [Mr. MAXEY,] that we had in the Army the proper machinery for the purchase of clothing and for the purchase of food for the Indians. But are we to continue forever the purchase of food and the purchase of clothing for the Indians? Have we no higher policy than that? Why should they not be compelled to support themselves as we support ourselves? Are we to organize and continue forever a great machinery to distribute clothing and subsistence to Indians? Is that the only object we have in view? If it is, I agree that the Army perhaps can distribute clothing quite as well as civil employés, perhaps better. I agree that subsistence can be better distributed among the Indians by the Army than by civilians. But all these provisions are merely temporary, and we must sooner or later—and the sooner the better—make some arrangement whereby the Indians shall support themselves.

A new policy was entered upon in 1868, a policy which had for its object mainly the drawing together of all the Indians of the United States upon a few reservations, and General Sherman and his confrères, members of the commission to which I have referred, recommended that all the Indians should be placed upon four reservations finally; that certain portions of them should be placed upon the reservation called the Sioux reservation, others in the Indian Territory, and that two reservations of sufficient extent should be provided for the Pacific coast. That policy has been steadily pursued from that time up to the present moment—the gathering of Indians on reservations in order that they might support and sustain themselves. This has led to a considerable expenditure in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona with the wild tribes of those Territories, and this bill provides for some $600,000 to subsist Indians in these two Territories. It is said that these are extraordinary provisions, and propose large sums of money to be squandered upon these Indians. And yet it is a fact stated in a report made to the Senate of the United States in 1867 that from the organization of the Territory of New Mexico up to that time we had been involved in a cost of $4,000,000 per annum for the Indians in that Territory alone, and General Sumner, who was in command in that Territory at one time, recommended the absolute purchase of all the right of citizens in that Territory in order that it might be set apart for the occupation of Indians wholly. And now we complain because we pay from $450,000 to $600,000 per annum for the subsistence of the wild tribes in New Mexico and Arizona until they can be brought into such a condition of civilization as will enable them to support themselves.

I am not here, Mr. President, to say that all the money that has been appropriated to the Indian service has been faithfully applied. I do not believe it has been so applied; but certainly we are capable of reforms in this regard. I believe such reforms have been inaugurated in the Indian Bureau; and I am sustained in that belief from the fact that to-day no one can point, so far as I know, to a single instance where the public moneys appropriated for the Indian service are being squandered. I know of no present instance of it, though I have no doubt there has been wasteful expenditure in the past.

But now, Mr. President, it seems to me a most damaging proposition to the Indians themselves if they are to be civilized, and, if I may be permitted here to express an opinion upon that subject, I think it will be equally damaging to the Army of the United States. We propose to transfer all the control of three hundred thousand Indians to Army officers. I am very much mistaken if the effect of that will not be the actual and utter demoralization of the Army. It takes away from their proper duties at least one hundred and fifty officers. Can they be spared? If you will look at the last report of the Secretary of War, you will find that our entire Army is actually employed now; and yet it is proposed I believe to reduce the Army and the number of Army officers. They are all in employment; but this bill proposes to divert from one hundred to one hundred and fifty of the officers to civil employment, and make them responsible to a civil department of the Government rather than to the Army.

But who is it that asks for this transfer, and why? Do any of the Indians seek this transfer? Do any of them consent to it? I know of no single Indian tribe that has given its consent in any manner to this transfer. I have now on my table the memorial of the five civilized nations of the Indian Territory, protesting against the transfer of these civilized nations to the control of the Army. So of all the Indian tribes who are capable of protesting. I want some one to tell me in what respect economy will result from this transfer. There are from thirty-five thousand to forty thousand Sioux that must be subsisted. We appropriate this year a million dollars for that purpose; last year we appropriated about $1,300,000, and it was all expended. Will it be claimed, can it be claimed that the Army will subsist these Sioux more cheaply than the Indian Bureau is doing to-day? I was at the Red Cloud agency last year, and I made inquiry of the relative cost of provisions in the Army and at the agency, and in every instance the supplies were delivered at the agency cheaper under the Indian Bureau than they were at Camp Robinson, a mile and a half away. But our laws provide that all the Indian supplies shall be inspected by Army officers, and there can be no frauds at any of the agencies to-day if the laws are enforced, unless those frauds are connived at by Army officers, because every article of Indian goods must be inspected by an Army officer under existing law, and I believe it is a wise provision that requires their inspection by proper Army officers.

The expense of the Indian Bureau is an expense that cannot be avoided under existing circumstances. That is the trouble. We have treaty stipulations; we have necessities arising from the condition of the Indians which compel us to expend this money. Every portion of our country now is settled by white people. The Pacific Railroad extends from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, dividing this country into two great parts, and all the country between the Rocky Mountains and the Pacific Ocean is to-day traversed by miners and others seeking wealth and homes, and they are constantly intruding upon Indian reservations and upon the rights of the Indians; and the necessary result is that the hunting-grounds of the Indians have been absolutely destroyed, and they are compelled either to resort to agriculture or to marauding for the purpose of gaining a subsistence, or else they must be subsisted by the Government. They are entitled to a fair consideration by the Government. We have purchased from them at nominal rates nearly the entire western portion of our country. I remember only a day or two since looking over a treaty which embraced the purchase of a portion of my State and the northern portion of the State of Illinois and the southern portion of the State of Wisconsin. I found that that whole country was purchased of Indian tribes at five cents an acre—Southern Wisconsin, Northern Illinois, and Northeastern Iowa; and yet all those lands brought into the Treasury of the United States a dollar and a quarter an acre and they are worth to-day from fifty to a hundred dollars an acre. And yet we complain because we are compelled to appropriate a few thousand dollars annually to these same tribes that have been driven west to a country which is not self-supporting.

I say, then, the Indians have some claim upon us for our consideration, and expenditures must be made for them whether they are under the control of the Army or whether they are under the control of a civil department of the Government.

Now, Mr. President, I want some Senator who is in favor of this transfer to tell me where and how money is to be saved by it. We have seventy Indian agents. Seventy Army officers may be assigned to take their places; but if they are so assigned they must be drawn away from some other duty; and is it possible that we have seventy Army officers who are not now required for the military service? A bill was reported this morning by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I do not know but this third section provides that Army officers on the retired list may be assigned to this duty. Is that the way a saving is to be made? Are men who have gone before an Army board and sworn or brought proper evidence before the board showing that they are unfit for any duty to be assigned to the borders of our country and to have charge of these great Indian tribes? Certainly not. The men who will be assigned to these agencies must be Army officers in the regular line; men who are in actual service. Can they be spared? I do not believe they can be. By transferring this Bureau to the Army you can save no expense that I know of except the pay of the seventy agents. You must still employ carpenters and blacksmiths; you must have saw-mills and flouring-mills. Why? Because the treaties require them. Can you assign soldiers to these duties? This bill says that no persons other than Army officers and soldiers and the regular employés of the Army shall be employed under the third section; you cannot save any money by changing the service to the Army in that way, because these employments must be continued, and the men who are thus employed must be paid.

Are you to save anything in the contingent expenses of the agencies? I know of no way by which a saving will be made in that regard. Can the Army subsist the Indians more cheaply than they are now being subsisted? Go to the records of your Army, and you will see that the Army pays more in every instance for the same character of supplies than is paid by the Indian Bureau. Do you say that the Indian agents do not deliver these supplies? I answer you that the law to-day requires that they shall be delivered in the presence of an Army officer; and if they are not honestly delivered, there is a fault in the administration of existing law. There cannot be fraud in the delivery of these articles unless that fraud is connived at and assented to by an Army officer, because this inspection is not only required by law, but, as I understand, by a regulation of the Department. The goods are inspected at every point; they are inspected in New York, where they are purchased; they are inspected again in Omaha; they are inspected at the end of the railway, and they are inspected finally at the agencies, provided the Army officers discharge the duties assigned them by law. Not only this, but men have followed important shipments of goods from the place of shipment to the place of delivery in order to see that the actual goods purchased should be delivered to the Indians.

I cannot see what possible saving is to result from a bodily transfer of this Bureau to the War Department and from placing under the absolute control of Army officers the Indians and the distribution of all their supplies. That is all there is of this question. There certainly is no party in this question; there certainly ought to be none. There cannot be a party division with reference to this subject, as it seems to me; surely there ought to be none. There are no party spoils in it. The Indian agents now are all appointed, not by party, not by the President in the interest of party, but entirely by religious denominations, absolutely without the control of party organizations; so that there can be no party object, it seems to me, in securing this transfer.

Mr. President, I did not rise with any desire to occupy the time of the Senate in the discussion of this question. I only desired to call attention to one or two leading points which I think ought to govern us in the discharge of our duties here in reference to the Indians. We owe an obligation to them to endeavor at least to civilize them, and we owe an obligation to the Government to so civilize them as to make them self-supporting. Purely as a question of economy on our own part, as a question of money, we should make them self-supporting wherever they are, whether under the Army or under the Indian Bureau. I submit to the good sense of Senators that if we are to teach them agriculture an Army officer or a soldier is not the person to perform that service. I submit again that this is a civil service and not an Army service. We have Indian treaties now with nearly all the tribes in our country. They have large trust funds amounting in the aggregate to $15,000,000 or $16,000,000. The disbursement of these funds is a civil duty; it is not a duty pertaining to the Army; it is a civil function, and ought to be performed by civil officers. In addition to that, we have placed under our control a large amount of land which we are required to sell, and which must be sold under the care of the Interior Department. All our land system is in that Department; that is the repository of our land titles and everything pertaining to them. All this is a part of our Indian policy and Indian service. Take the Osages as an example of our duty. We have a large reservation in trust which we are bound to sell and account for to those Indians. Is that to be done under the War Department? Is that the proper place? So of nearly all the services to be performed with reference to the Indians.

What are we to gain economically by the transfer? I submit that it is an impossibility unless you assume, to begin with, that there is no honesty except in the Army; unless you assume, to begin with, that the Interior Department is, and of necessity must be, under all administrations and under all circumstances, absolutely and irretrievably corrupt; that we can find no man in this country with honesty and intelligence enough to administer the Bureau of Indian Affairs unless we assign to its administration a colonel of the Army.

I, for one, am not ready to admit such a proposition. I submit, therefore, that no Senator can point out to me a material saving by the transfer of this Bureau to the War Department.

And having said this much, Mr. President, I shall conclude by adding only that it is my purpose to oppose at every stage possible the transfer of the Indians to the care of the Army of the United States.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator before he takes his seat allow me to ask him how many employés there are under this Bureau?

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will tell me what he means by "employés," I will answer.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I mean all the persons employed by the Indian Bureau to effect the objects of the Bureau, to carry out the policy of the Bureau.

Mr. ALLISON. There are eighty Indian agents. This bill appropriates for sixty-eight. There is a reduction in the number of agents. There are, I believe, in the Bureau of Indian Affairs thirty-five clerks who are keeping the books of the Bureau. Does the Senator from Delaware suppose that those clerks will not be necessary if the Bureau is transferred to the War Department? They have clerks in the War Department as they have in the Indian Bureau, and yet this bill makes no provision whatever for the keeping of the accounts of the Indian Bureau in the War Department.

Mr. SAULSBURY. My question was one for information, not for criticism at all.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand. There are thirty-five employés in the Bureau proper here.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, the question before the Senate is as to the transfer of the government of the Indians and the management of their affairs from the Interior to the War Department. This is in no sense a question of appropriation. It is no more a question of appropriation than is the making of an Indian treaty. It is general legislation of the most important character, and I call the attention of Senators who propose to vote for this transfer to the fact that while we have insisted on the proposition as applied to other appropriation bills that general legislation changing essentially the character of the service of the United States should not be put upon such bills, if we adopt this transfer we break down that partition entirely, because here is a proposition of a general character involving no appropriation whatever, and if we can adopt this we can on appropriation bills change the whole civil service of the United States, and we can refer the administration and the organization of the civil service to the Appropriation Committees of the two Houses. That is my first objection to the third section of the bill. I have taken the ground with regard to other appropriation bills that it is not the duty nor is it a part of the office of the Appropriation Committees to recommend and present legislation of this kind; but if we recognize it in this case we are perfectly naked, so far as legislation of this kind is concerned, in reference to every other appropriation bill. I would say, therefore, to Senators that to be consistent upon this subject they must exclude the consideration of this matter from this bill. It is too big a question to come up on an appropriation bill. It is a question that ought to be considered not by the Appropriation Committee, but by the Committee on Indian Affairs. If the Appropriation Committee be the proper committee to consider this question, they may take all the Indian business just as well. It belongs to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and has no place upon this bill.

Mr. President, this proposition, in my opinion, involves another; and that is, it is equivalent to saying, if it is adopted, that the Indians cannot be civilized, and that they have but one prospect, and that is war and extinction. It is a simple declaration that the Indians cannot be civilized. The argument of my friend from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] yesterday, and every argument I have heard in favor of the transfer, proceeds on that hypothesis, that the only fate awaiting the Indian is extinction and that he cannot be civilized. That is the substance of every argument that is made or that can be made in favor of the proposition. It is certainly the substance of what my friend from Missouri said. I do not believe in that doctrine for one moment. I do not believe there is a race of men on earth that cannot be civilized. There is not a civilized nation to-day that was not at one time a race of savages, and it is very doubtful whether what we call civilization originated with white men. The probability is that it originated with men who are called red or copper-colored. Why should we say that the Indians cannot be civilized? Has the experiment failed? It certainly has not. Look at the condition of the tribes in the Indian Territory. They are not what we would like them to be; but yet they have made great advances, and their condition is full of hope and encouragement. Look at the remnants of tribes in New York and other States, scattered around now in all the older States of this Union. The Indian can be civilized, and he will be civilized, if the proper surroundings are had and the proper method is taken.

But, Mr. President, one great difficulty in the way of civilizing the Indians is that we have not acquired their confidence, that we have not kept faith with them. We have dealt with them falsely for a hundred years past, ay for two hundred years, and we are breaking faith with them this very day. We are now in the beginning of what threatens to be a formidable Indian war, the most formidable we have had for many years, and that war grows absolutely and entirely out of a breach of faith on the part of this Government. Can my friend deny it? When we talk about civilization, it is a little questionable where it should begin, whether with this race or with the other. Years and years ago we set apart the Black Hills country to a race of Indians; we gave it to them in perpetuity; we made as solemn an engagement with them as we could make with any nation in the world, and we solemnly promised to protect them in the enjoyment of that property. We did that for a consideration. They gave up lands and territories that are now rich, covered with white population. We made this contract with them and we are breaking it, and the whole world knows we are breaking it. There is no disguise about it. We promised to keep that country for them and to keep the white men out, and we do not do it; we let the gold-hunters go in there by the thousand, destroying their game, taking away their means of subsistence. We do not keep them out and we do not try to keep them out. Then the Indians take the only course that uncivilized men know anything about. They have got no courts; they cannot prosecute these gold-hunters for trespass for invading their territory. They employ the only law that is known to them, and that is the law of force; and then we make war upon them. We are now sending nearly three thousand men into that territory, three or four columns of troops, that will cost us perhaps from five to ten millions of dollars. Nobody can tell the end of it. The Indian war in Florida, where there was not one Indian where there are twenty in the Black Hills, cost this Goverment over $40,000,000. Now we are entering upon a most formidable Indian war, and the cost of it no man can predict; and it is brought about absolutely and entirely by a breach of faith on the part of this Government, and yet we say these people cannot be civilized, therefore turn them over to extinction.

I am asked the question "What is the highest measure of civilization?" The observance of good faith, keeping your word. I know of no brighter jewel in the crown of civilization than truth, good faith, integrity, and honest dealing. That is what we are not doing. We let these gold-hunters go by the thousand into the country of the Indians, absolutely annihilating their game and means of living, and in doing that we are not only doing the Indians a great wrong, but we are doing the gold-hunters a great wrong. All the evidence goes to prove that there is but little gold there. Hundreds of them have starved to death; nearly all come back ruined, and many of them come back desperate. More men die from starvation, and there is far more suffering brought about by disappointment and defeat than there is by the violence of the Indians. If we had kept these men out and done our duty, we should have performed for them the highest possible service; but they were deluded by speculators, by adventurers, and they have been drawn on by visions of sudden wealth from the gathering of gold until there has been untold suffering among them. The gold is not there, except in very small quantities. The Indians become outraged. A great war is to result, to cost us many, many millions of dollars. Yet we say we will turn these Indians over to the War Department because they cannot be civilized. Well, if they are to judge of our civilization by our truthfulness, by our good faith, they will have none of it. That is very certain.

My friend from Missouri says the system has failed. It is not the failure of that system; it is the failure of ourselves; that is it; and, if the failure is in ourselves, how much better will it be when you put the matter in the hands of the War Department? They cannot civilize. That is not their trade. Soldiers never made missionaries. Men who are educated for war do not look to the arts of peace; they look inevitably in the direction of their education. My friend would do so, and I would do so, and any other man would if he was brought up in the Army. I know something about the power of education, and we understand distinctly that the Army cannot be a civilizer, and it cannot and will not be a missionary.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to ask the Senator a question with the view of getting his views on the point I am going to make. Why will the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department necessarily imply that war will be made upon the Indians or that they will not have all the advantages they now have of missionaries to civilize them? Does war or the driving out of the missionaries follow as a necessary consequence of transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department?

Mr. MORTON. I say to my friend from North Carolina that I think it does imply the abandonment of every organized effort at civilization.

Mr. MERRIMON. Why?

Mr. MORTON. Because it is a military government with military ideas; and because the change will be made on account of the very conviction, as argued by the Senator from Missouri, that you cannot civilize them. That is the reason. The change proceeds upon that hypothesis; and after you have made the change for the express reason that you cannot civilize them, does my friend believe the effort to civilize them will be continued? Certainly not.

Mr. MERRIMON. I have the impression, if the Senator wants me to answer now, that it is perfectly competent to use the Army in such way as to keep the white man from trespassing on the Indians and opening up the most efficient avenues for purposes of civilization—avenues that certainly will be much more effective than those now employed—and to send missionaries and school-teachers there and protect them in a way that they are not now protected, giving them a power to operate their offices that they do not now enjoy.

Mr. MORTON. That argument would be a pretty good one for military government in every respect. I want to make one suggestion to my friend in reference to the present effort being made to civilize the Indians. As was shown yesterday by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] it has been a favorite idea with this Government from the time of its first organization to civilize the Indians. It was the opinion of Washington, of Jefferson, of Madison, of Monroe, and of their successors, that the Indian could be and ought to be civilized; but we have now taken a step in advance—and I call the attention of the Senator to it—in the way of civilizing the Indian that was never taken before, and the prospect is better than it ever was before I see the Commissioner of Indian Affairs here to-day, and I venture to assert that under the operation of the present system and policy we have a better class of Indian agents now along the whole frontier and beyond it than we have ever had before.

Mr. OGLESBY. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs not having the liberty to speak on this floor, I rise to answer the question of the Senator from Indiana, and to state that it is the decided opinion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and his colleagues that the Government never had a better set of Indian agents than it has at this time.

Mr. MORTON. So I understand. Ten, twenty, thirty, forty years ago we had Indian agents, but they were appointed chiefly through the instrumentality of politicians. They were men who were needy, who could afford to go out there for a small salary, expecting sometimes to augment it by improper means. They were not chosen because of their fitness always, although many good men were chosen, and there were shortcomings and there were failures. But now we have this policy, and I think Senators ought to consider it. The different churches in this country, the great religious denominations, have taken the matter into their hands. The selection of agents is no longer left to chance. It is no longer left to Senators and Representatives who may want to reward their friends or to provide for some hungry dependent; but the church, in its anxiety to make civilization a success in a particular tribe, selects the agent and keeps a watch over him. There is an espionage over the agents now that never existed before; they are better watched; and, in addition to the ordinary means of watching them, the churches that select them keep a look-out over them, and the honor of that church is bound up in the integrity and the efficiency of the agent.

Therefore we have got the best Indian agents as a class we have ever had. I think that the agents selected by the churches ought to be appointed in every case, I do not care what State they come from. If the Society of Friends choose their agents, and have got them still, and are willing to commit the honor of their church and the success of their undertaking to their choice, we ought to confirm those agents and let them go. The churches have this matter at heart. There are thousands of religious men in this country who are not in office. Without doubt they are intent upon the civilization of the Indians and the bettering of their condition. They spend their time and they spend their money for this object, and instead of being snubbed by us they ought to be encouraged. The men who are engaged in this are the very "salt of the earth."

We hear it said in a general way that the Indian agents are all stealing. The general charge is that they are all thieves and all steal. I suppose there is a great deal of general lying upon that subject. There are thefts now and then, and there will be until human nature becomes far more perfect than it is now.

Mr. LOGAN. I will call the attention of the Senator to the fact that there has been a committee of the other House investigating this question all winter, and they have not found anything of the kind. They have made their report.

Mr. MORTON. Still the general charge is made. I heard the charge made in the other House myself the other day that the Indian agents are thieves. That is the general impression. It has been said so often that a great many believe it. There will be a theft now and then under any system until you reform white nature, to say nothing about Indian nature. If you put the Army into that condition, with all the safeguards thrown around the Army, you may now and then find an officer who will yield to temptation. You will not elevate the Army by it; you will possibly drag it down.

I may remark right here, in regard to putting these duties upon Army officers, that officers are not educated and have not entered the Army for this purpose. You may talk about the rank and file of the Army discharging the duties performed by employés, acting as blacksmiths and wagonmakers, acting as the mechanics for the Indians, and performing daily labor, but I tell you the Army is not enlisted for that purpose. You cannot put the rank and file to that kind of labor without violating the very contract under which every man is enlisted. There is a contract with the common soldier which we ought to have some respect for, even if we have no respect at all for our engagements with the Indians. When you take the officer out of his sphere and put him upon duty that does not belong to him, you are not observing the contract with him; and when you take the common soldier from the ranks and put him to the performance of manual labor, as this bill contemplates, you are not keeping your contract with the common soldier, because he did not enlist for that purpose. That is not a part of his general duties. No, sir; this thing is a violation of duty all around.

But what is the argument urged upon the part of our friends in favor of this change? They say it is cheaper, as if cheapness were the only consideration; that we have a right to do a thing because it is cheaper. I once heard the same argument made in favor of slavery, because men could raise cotton cheaper with slave labor than with free labor. The world put that argument under its feet. Here we have the argument in favor of this transfer that it is cheaper; therefore every other consideration must be ignored. Will it be cheaper? As the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] pertinently asked a few minutes ago, will it be cheaper? I say it will be productive of Indian war, war after war, and one Indian war will cost more perhaps than it would cost to maintain the Indians for ten years. The Florida war with a handful of Seminoles cost the Government over $40,000,000; a war which ought to have been avoided, which was utterly groundless; a war that was brought about like the present Black Hills war, by bad faith on the part of the United States. Yet we would break our faith at every step, and the result of it is to give over these Indians as a bad job and say they cannot be civilized.

As was remarked awhile ago, Mr. President, we have a duty to perform to the Indians. In the first place, if we turn them over to the War Department and abandon all attempts at their civilization, it is saying to the Indians in the face of the world, "We expect to support you until you are dead; our interest therefore is to have you killed off as fast as possible; we take no step to make you self-supporting; we provide you with no education, with no agricultural implements; we do not instruct you to take care of yourselves; we have to take care of you, and will submit to it as long as you live; therefore it is our interest that you shall not live very long."

On the score of economy we should make them self-supporting; we should educate them. The only Indians who do not cost us anything are those living in the Indian Territory to-day, who by means of civilization are raising their own bread and making their own provisions. They are the only Indians who are taking care of themselves. The experiment is a success in that Territory, and it can be made so elsewhere.

Then, Mr. President, we have a duty to perform toward the Indians. They were the original proprietors of this country. We are living upon their soil. They were the original owners. The Presbyterians, the Methodists, the Baptists, the Episcopalians, the Catholics, and others are contributing their money every year, hundreds and thousands and even millions of dollars, to send missionaries to China, to the far-off islands of the Southern Pacific, to civilize and to Christianize them; and shall we turn our backs upon the natives and savages of our own country and say that we abandon them, that they are incapable of civilization? No, Mr. President, we cannot take this step without degrading our own civilization. It would be an impeachment of it; it would be an acknowledgment that we are not the civilized people that we fondly claim that we are.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I do not rise to make a speech, but cannot avoid expressing my disapprobation of this measure to transfer the Indians of the country to the charge of the War Department. I am glad that Senators have given the attention to this subject that they have, and have made such able expositions of the subject that the country may fully understand the measure.

Mr. President, in our interior and on our frontier there is a people which every Senator knows and the civilized world knows we are bound by every obligation of justice, of humanity, and of honor to protect and cherish as our wards. Once they were rich and we were poor; they were free and we dependent; they were powerful and we were weak; and there is not a generous heart in America that does not to-day regret that our prosperity has been disastrous to them. There is a remnant of that people still with us, toward whom we have the opportunity of making some indemnity for the wrong that we have done those whom we have superseded. There is a remnant toward whom we by our justice and by our generosity can relieve somewhat the national conscience and do something to improve the reputation of our country. Within the last few years we have seen measures taken to that end. Every religious denomination of the country, the Methodists, the Presbyterians, the Catholics, and the Episcopalians, has joined with the Chief Magistrate, as distinguished for his humanity as for his courage, and has been vigorously at work to ameliorate the condition of the Indians. These denominations contribute their money, they send their missionaries, they select the Indian agent, and in many instances he is the agent of his denomination in distributing their benefactions. The religious community of the country feel the deepest interest in this subject. They ask no change. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs assures me that every religious denomination in the country asks that things may remain as they are. The Indians without exception ask that they may remain as they are. The President of the United States, who has this subject at heart, asks that things may remain as they are; and yet we propose with a ruthless hand to break down this noble work of charity and justice, and, while all are satisfied, propose to hand this whole subject over to the War Department.

I should like to know in what capacity it is that the War Department is to take charge of the Indians. Does the Senate of the United States undertake to say that it will in times of peace render inhabitants of this country subject militarily to the War Department? Are we to take 55,000 civilized inhabitants of this country and all other Indians, and say "you shall be subject to the sword?" I presume that nobody will assume that we intend any such thing; and I do not understand the advocates of this measure to place it upon that ground. If I am mistaken, I should like to be corrected. As no one so asserts, I assume that the advocates of this measure hold that these Indians are not to be subject to the soldiers and officers of the Army in a military capacity; that would be an atrocity that no one would advocate.

You cannot send the military into any part of the country where there is insurrection, even at the call of the governor, such is the jealousy of our people, that there is not an outcry against the supremacy of the military power over the civil power.

Well, if the officers and soldiers of the Army do not take charge of this subject in a military capacity, I should like to know what advantage is to accrue from the proposed change to the border States, who say that this subject is more interesting in its effects to them than upon those States that are remote from the Indian tribes. They can receive no more protection from the Army after the transfer than they do now.

But, Mr. President, if the Indian Bureau is not transferred to the War Department in its military capacity, I should like to know by what authority we can transfer the civil administration of this country to the Army. What right have we to transfer the administration of any civil interests of the nation to the Army? It is a violation of the very spirit of the Constitution. The Indian agents are civil officers; their functions are civil; they are nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The Constitution requires that these officers shall so be created. But this bill undertakes to say that the Congress of the United States shall confer the functions of these civil officers upon the Army, thus in effect usurping the power of the President by nomination and the power of the Senate by confirmation to select the persons who shall perform those civil duties.

Mr. President, this should not be a political question, and I hope that the Senate of the United States will show the American people that they are prepared to do justice to this afflicted race, and that the people will have the support and countenance of the Senate in their work of justice and charity, and I hope that this step in retrogression, this step which seems to be more an advance toward barbarism than toward civilization, will not, in this year of our Lord 1876, receive the approval of the American Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the War Department is not a slaughter-house, neither is the Army composed exclusively of butchers. The idea is not entertained by those who favor the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department that, when that desirable object is attained, the Indians will be assembled upon a reservation and put to the sword. It is not the purpose of any Senator who desires this change in the administration of Indian affairs that these tribes should be gathered together and shot to death by musketry. I trust the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Indiana, in arguing that this is a policy of extinction, of blood, a policy that is an impeachment upon modern civilization, do not seriously intend to leave the impression upon the country that those who favor this policy propose the indiscriminate massacre of our Indian wards. Certainly, sir, it seems almost like a burlesque, and I am at a loss to understand what these Senators mean who profess the opinion that the administration of Indian affairs should continue in the Interior Department when they allege that the change which is proposed is dictated by a malignant purpose to extirpate the Indians from the face of the earth.

Why, sir, what conceivable motive has the Army to provoke a warfare or to incite the Indians to depredations? Is there any honor or glory to be achieved in Indian warfare? On the contrary, would it not be the object and purpose of the Army—if they had the control of Indian affairs—to maintain peace with those tribes? Would it not be the inevitable result—if this transfer were made—that the Army would be devoted to the peaceful solution of the Indian question? What officer or private desires to lose his life in an Indian campaign? What glory, honor, or distinction is to be obtained either by the general commanding an expedition or by the soldier who shares in the hardships of an Indian campaign? Why, sir, that theory is absurd and untenable. I trust when these general allegations are made that this is a policy of bloodthirstiness, of extinction and extermination, that the Senators who entertain these views will not believe that the country is to be imposed on by assertions of that description.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. He asks what glory there is in an Indian war. I will merely call his attention to one thing that I presume he has noticed; at least, if he has not, it is because perhaps he is not connected with the Military Committee. For the last three years at every session of the Senate we have had quite a number of brevet appointments sent to the Senate for confirmation. There are now lying in the Committee on Military Affairs over one hundred. Nearly every officer on the frontier has been brevetted within the last two or three years, and the brevets lie down in our committee-room, and for this reason: I have opposed all the time brevetting men for making assaults on the Indians, on the ground that the law recognizes brevets only in time of war for gallant conduct in the face of the enemy. We decided under that statute that where no war had been declared according to law brevets could not be made, and they lie there unacted on.

Mr. CONKLING. Are those brevets all for services against Indians?

Mr. LOGAN. All for services against Indians, and over one hundred of them are now lying in the room of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. INGALLS. And that proves precisely what I said: that no matter how bravely a man may fight; what hardships he may encounter; what loss of limb or health or life he may suffer in campaigns against Indians, he cannot even secure the paltry decoration of a brevet from the Senate. Why, sir, the hardships and privations that have been endured, the deeds of gallantry and valor that have been performed upon the frontier during the last five years, if they had been done during the late civil war, would have secured the thanks of Congress and the highest honors of the service; and yet the men who are now engaged in this Indian warfare receive no recognition. You do not even dignify it with the title of war; you do not acknowledge it to be a condition of war; you dispatch converging columns into an enemy's country, order them to rendezvous at a certain point; they continue for months in the field, and when they ask the Senate for recognition of their heroic deeds, you refuse them the cheap embellishment of a brevet!

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will allow me a word inasmuch as he makes that statement, and I think he is a very great friend to the Army and desires them all to be brevetted. I do not pretend to know much about war or the Army, but I do pretend in my capacity as a Senator to at least try to interpret the law as I think it ought to be interpreted. The very statement the Senator made, that there was no glory in Indian warfare, only proves that, if the Senate will not recognize glory in assaults on Indians merely for the purpose of getting promotion, there will not be any glory in Indian warfare. It is because we do not desire to encourage men to make assaults on Indians that we say the law in its meaning does not recognize brevets for such services. Brevets are recognized as the law says for gallant conduct in time of war in the face of the enemy. That is the language of the statute. We all understand what "war" means. War in the legal acceptation is only recognized when war is declared. We decided that on the law, and I say now that if you will construe that law so as to give brevets for Indian warfare you will have an Indian war from the time you do it until the Senate denies it. It is the occupation of the men; the manner in which they attain distinction is by fighting. The very moment you let them know that by assaulting Indians they will get promotion war will be incessant. That is human nature. If the gentleman had been a young officer himself once, perhaps he would know something about this thing.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I am a friend of the Army, as the Senator intimates. I believe it to be the profession of honor. I believe, as I have heretofore said on this floor, that it consists largely of men who do not know how to lie and who have never been taught to steal, and I say to the Senator that, when he alleges that the recent military operations that have been conducted for the protection of the frontier of the West have been mere volunteer operations of the Army against the Indians for the purpose of getting brevets, he is very much outside of the record; and if he does intend to be so understood, at least their efforts have been very unsuccessful——

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator, I suppose, does not desire to misrepresent the statements of other Senators. I said no such thing.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator certainly intimated that these operations by our forces in the West were volunteer aggressions by the Army; that they had been conducted for the purpose of making a warfare in which they themselves could obtain some distinction or some honor.

Mr. LOGAN. I said no such thing.

Mr. INGALLS. I understood the Senator so.

Mr. LOGAN. No; I said that if the Senate would recognize raids on Indians as war, and would brevet and promote for them, then war would be incessant. That is what I said. You can infer what you please from that.

Mr. INGALLS. Why, Mr. President, war does not depend upon the wish of the Army, nor upon the general, nor the colonel, nor upon the privates who are enlisted in the Army. These men are directed by their superiors to proceed to a point to accomplish certain results; and to say that the mere empty gratification of a brevet to be obtained by aggression along the western frontier by Army officers is something that would either captivate their imagination or stimulate them into activity seems to me to be very much outside of what the facts would warrant.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course war does not proceed from the direction of a colonel or a major; it proceeds probably by the direction of the President following out some law of Congress, or of the General of the Army or the Secretary of War. But I will say to the Senator that his familiarity with military men—I will not say military matters—perhaps would suggest this to him, if he would think for a moment: How does the General of the Army know anything about ordering troops in Arizona? What knowledge has he for the purpose of making an order as to troops there? Does not the Senator know that his action must be based on information obtained from Army officers in Arizona? Does he not know that the movements of the Army, outside of a general plan or arrangement, are based upon suggestions made or information given by inferior and subordinate officers? Does he not know that? Does he not know that the very movements now in the Black Hills are not the movements of the Secretary of War, or of the General, or of the President, but they are based upon certain information given by officers there, and not officers here?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the honorable Senator allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope I do not lose the right to the floor by these interruptions.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I merely want to ask a question in regard to a statement the Senator from Illinois has just made. Does not the honorable Senator know that the movements now in the Black Hills were made at the special request of the peace commissioners and the Interior Department.

Mr. LOGAN. Suppose they were?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understood the honorable Senator to state that they were made by reason of the reports of the military officers there.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not say "reports of the officers." I said upon information from there. It makes no difference whether it comes from an officer or not. Naturally it would come in that way, and usually it does. I was speaking of Arizona. So far as the Black Hills are concerned, I do not know on what information the recent movement has been ordered; but it is not the information of the President, not the information of the General; but it is an act based upon information acquired from somebody else.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The honorable Senator stated that the present movement in the Black Hills was made upon information and reports from the military officers there. I stated that it was made at the request of the Interior Department and the peace commissioners, who the honorable Senator is so anxious should retain the control of the Indian Department.

Mr. LOGAN. I have nothing to do with controlling the Indians. I am only discussing the question the same as any other Senator; but I will say to the honorable Senator from Nebraska that he exhibits too much feeling on this subject. He is a man who has great knowledge and experience in reference to the management of Indian affairs; he is a man whose experience and knowledge I would certainly give weight to in regard to many things; but I see no occasion for his exhibition of feeling whenever this question is mentioned. I will only say to him, though my information may not be so correct as his, though I may not know so much about the matter, that I did not know that it was at the request of the Indian commissioners. The Senator could have said that it was without exhibiting the feeling that he did. I said that the General of the Army could not tell anything about the movements necessary to be made in Arizona, nor could the President or the Secretary of War; that their orders must be based upon information derived from the subordinates there. I said that; and I said, too, that I presumed the movement in the Black Hills was being made on information of the same character. I did presume so. It is on some information, certainly not of their own volition, of their own desire. I was only attempting to show the Senate that all movements of armies were not originated in the General, or the President, or the Secretary of War, but were based upon information, and that that information naturally would come from subordinate officers, because that is the channel through which they obtain their information in reference to the management of Army affairs. It is seldom that there is any other channel through which they obtain information. Of course they will not refuse information coming through any other channel, but that is the natural channel and the one through which they almost always obtain their information.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, "The way to resume is to resume." I have been by this digression diverted from the point which I was attempting to make, which was to repel the imputation that the transfer of the administration of Indian affairs to the War Department was necessarily based upon a policy of destruction. The Senator from Illinois seems to imply that this warfare along the western frontier is waged exclusively for the benefit of the Army, got up by the officers themselves for personal purposes. He must be strangely ignorant of the history of Indian affairs during the past five years if he cannot recall the memorable campaigns that have been carried on by Crook in Arizona and New Mexico, at a cost of not less than $10,000,000; the campaign a year and a half ago of General Miles from Fort Sill, in Texas, and the Indian country, which resulted in the pacification of all the tribes of the plains; and those movements that are now going on in which three heavy columns are being concentrated at a point on the Yellowstone River, there to be dispersed during this summer and to operate locally for the purpose of disintegrating and destroying all power of the Indians for injury in the Territories of the Northwest. I say, sir, that these wars that have been conducted have been in every sense of the term wars; actual wars. They have been based upon military operations of a very grand description, covering vast extents of territory and necessitating the expenditure of immense sums of money, the performance of a great deal of individual gallantry, and resulting in the accomplishment of very valuable results: and they have been rendered necessary by the operations of what is known as "the peace policy," of which he is such an eminent advocate. If there had been no peace policy there would have been no Indian wars on the frontier during the past five years.

Mr. LOGAN. How does the Senator account for the wars in 1864, the Sioux war and the other different wars at that time? Were they caused by the peace policy?

Mr. INGALLS. Those were sporadic and exceptional. They originated from the condition of affairs in which we as a nation were then situated.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely suggest to the Senator that I do not accuse any particular person of getting up a war; I only say as to the result in Arizona, however beneficial it may have been to the Indians, which he seems to think it has been, it was somewhat beneficial to General Crook. It made him a general in the Army.

Mr. INGALLS. And very properly so, indeed, I think.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not say it was not proper.

Mr. INGALLS. He performed services that entitle him to more distinction than he has received, to a prouder recognition than his country has yet bestowed upon him.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not question that.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from New Jersey, in the remarks which he has made, which do honor to his heart and credit to his sensibilities, alluded to the fact that the Indian tribes existing in this country are a little remnant, as he calls them, of a once proud nation. If the Senator from New Jersey were a little more familiar with the facts in regard to the Indian population of this country he would somewhat modify his statements. There are at the present time within our dominion about three hundred thousand Indians, and there never was over half a million from the time Columbus first discovered the continent, including the tribes that lived in New England, those that inhabited the great Ohio basin, those that lived to the south and that now reside in the Indian Territory, and the Dacotah or wild Indians of the West, then beyond the Mississippi River, there never have been to exceed half a million in this country since it was first discovered; and that is a statement which is borne out by the facts of history. In 1492 the great mass of aboriginal population of this country was on the Mexican plateau. There were some twelve or fifteen million Indians then inhabiting this plateau around the city of Mexico; but up the valley of the Mississippi, along the Ohio, upon the flanks of the Alleghanies, and in New York and New England, there were a few scattered, incoherent bands of Indians, incapable of being either powerful or wealthy from the fact that they moved from place to place without settled agricultural or definite habitations; and there never have been at any time to exceed 20,000 fighting Indians on the soil of this country since white men first reached our shores. That apparently insignificant force, by its truculence, its ferocity, its absolute indifference to danger, has resisted the westward progress of Anglo-Saxon civilization in its successive movements, and has compelled the tide of humanity, as it has flowed westward down the Alleghanies and along the Ohio and across the Mississippi and the Missouri to break forever upon the frontier in a surf of flame and of blood. They are just as capable of mischief, just as capable of inflicting indescribable wrongs and nameless outrages upon the inhabitants of the West to-day as they were one hundred years ago upon the citizens of the then West, of Ohio and Indiana and Kentucky and Tennessee and Illinois.

No, sir, this question of bad faith on the part of this Government toward the Indian that is continually conjured here by the sickly sentimentalism of our humanitarian friends on this subject is a feeble and fleshless phantom. The Government, the people, have always manifested good faith toward the Indians. When you describe them as the owners of the soil, you might as well aver that the rattlesnake, the coyote, and the buffalo are the proprietors of the land where they dwell. They were never the owners of the soil. The law of nations, the law of civilization, the law of humanity repels the assertion as baseless and unfounded. They had the mere right of occupancy. They had the right to exist. But the assertion that barbarism has rights that are superior to those of civilization; that the savage is entitled to exclusive occupancy as against the Anglo-Saxon, he is maintaining a proposition that certainly will find no defenders among the writers upon international law. The Indians had no rights that were superior to the claims of civilization.

Mr. DAWES. That means "no rights that the white man is bound to respect."

Mr. INGALLS. I understand the remark of the Senator from Massachusetts when he says they have no rights that white men are bound to respect. I do not say that they have no rights which white men are bound to respect, but that when the claims of the Indian and the white man conflict, the rights of civilization are superior to the degradations of barbarism.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator allow me, as he has done me the honor to allude personally to me——

Mr. INGALLS. The honor was first done by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. Will he be kind enough to tell me on what principle of law the title to the land a man occupies is graded by his degree of civilization?

Mr. INGALLS. It would be a difficult subject to define, a very difficult one, indeed; but that is not the question now at issue.

Mr. DAWES. So I think.

Mr. INGALLS. But if the Senator from Massachusetts believes that as against the Pequods and the other aboriginal inhabitants of New England the pilgrim fathers, Winthrop and Bradford, their associates and co-laborers and descendants, had no rights. I should labor in vain to convince him. Civilization, in my judgment, is superior to barbarism. Enlightenment, religion, education, intelligence, good order, law—all these things that characterize an elevated race have their proper place; and whenever degradation, ignorance, or vice, crime or savagery comes in conflict with them they must yield. It is the right of civilization; it is a right that is recognized by every writer on international law and by every instinct of the human heart. The Senator himself knows that the Indians never had anything that could be called a title to the soil of this country; they never had the slightest right in it. It never has been recognized, and even in the reservations that they now have given them by Congress or by executive order, they simply have the possessory right, the right of occupancy, subject to the right of eminent domain in the American people.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask a question?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Has it not uniformly been held that the right of occupancy to the soil is in the Indian, and that if that occupancy is taken from him it must be by treaty stipulation? Has that not uniformly been so?

Mr. INGALLS. Why was not that enforced against the invaders of the Black Hills?

Mr. ALLISON. I am asking if that has not been the uniform policy of the Government from the beginning, recognized over and over again by the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. INGALLS. The Supreme Court has repeatedly held that the only right of the Indian in the soil is that of mere possession. This principle is too well established to admit of doubt.

I am somewhat impatient, I must confess, at the annual repetitions and reiterations of this perpetual tirade against what is called the bad faith of Anglo-Saxons toward the American Indians. They have not diminished in number materially; their condition has been immeasurably improved. There are to-day thousands of semi-civilized Indians where there was not one, or the trace of one, when the contest between civilization and barbarism began, and their future is infinitely more hopeful, infinitely better in every respect than it was when this struggle commenced, notwithstanding these continual assertions to the contrary. If the Senator from Massachusetts can believe for an instant that the great Supreme Ruler of this universe, the Maker, the Framer, and Architect of this world, designed this continent for the exclusive use and occupation of half a million semi-naked, breech-clouted, vermin-covered savages, then his idea of divine Providence is different from mine. The land that we are occupying to-day was bought and paid for. Whatever they desired they have obtained for it, and when the Senator from Iowa speaks about the soil of his State, and of Illinois, and of Wisconsin having been purchased for five cents an acre, that was more than it was worth. It was dear at five cents an acre; there was nothing produced upon it that could be sold; there was nothing that was worth the attention of civilized men until it had been surrendered by the Indian, and by the advances and by the increments of civilization had been made the abode of communities of happy and prosperous men.

I must allude to one remark made by the Senator from Indiana in the observations that fell from him just before the Senator from New Jersey took the floor. He referred to the enormous expense of the Black Hills war, of the Florida war, and of the other Indian wars that have afflicted this country. Let me say to him that the war that is now waged in the Black Hills is the absolute and direct result of the peace policy. Had there been no peace policy, there would not have been an Indian war in the Black Hills. A year and a half ago I called the attention of the Senate and of the country to the treaty stipulations under which the Sioux Indians were entitled to the exclusive occupation of that territory, to the invasions that were being made, and to the inevitable disasters that were sure to follow. My predictions have been more than realized; and I repeat that if when this invasion first began the President of the United States had issued his proclamation notifying all trespassers that that country was sacredly set apart and held by treaty stipulation for the use of the Indians, and warning all intruders that if they entered they would be expelled by military force, all this trouble would have been averted. But it was left to the broad-brimmed hat, the drab skirt, and the "thee" and "thou" of the Quaker; it was left to the potential influences of the school-master, the preacher, and the Sunday-school superintendent; and the result is that to-day the bones of hundreds of misguided men lie strewn along those melancholy wastes from Laramie to the Yellowstone, while three columns of troops are penetrating the country for the purpose of enforcing the rights of white men against the Indians.

Sir, when this difficulty began, if the Army had had control of this business, if at the gate-way of that enchanted region there had been stationed a military force, armed and equipped, sufficient to expel every man that set his foot within that locality, we should not have had this difficulty about the invasion of the Black Hills or the present Indian war.

Mr. MORTON. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly.

Mr. MORTON. I understand the Senator to say that this existing Black Hills war is the result of the peace policy.

Mr. INGALLS. Absolutely.

Mr. MORTON. But the argument that my friend offers to sustain that comes entirely short. He says that if the Army had been there instead of the drab-coats and the Quakers with their theeing and thouing to keep the intruders from the Black Hills, we should have had no war. What has the peace policy got to do with that, I should like to know? The Quakers were not intrusted with keeping people out of the Black Hills; that was not their business. He says that if the President had issued his proclamation to keep all intruders away, and notifying them that they should be expelled, we should not have had them there. My friend forgets that the President did that very thing; his proclamation was issued, unless my memory is at fault.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly the Army were sent there, but they failed to take out those people from the Black Hills. There are nearly twelve hundred miles of border there; and how can an army keep people out of that country?

Mr. MORTON. My friend from Kansas, I think, forgets that the President did issue a proclamation warning all intruders away; but they did not stay away; they went there in violation of the treaty. And now this brings me right back to the point that the Black Hills war is the result of a violation on the part of the whites of a treaty; that that country was given to the Indians in perpetuity, and the solemn faith of this nation was pledged to their peaceable enjoyment of it; but the whites have gone there, and that has led to the war. I submit to my friend that I am right after all, and that his proposition is not right. The proposition on the part of the Quakers, if you please, that they would take charge of certain tribes and attempt to civilize them, teach them the arts of peace and agriculture, is one thing, and the question of keeping the whites out of the Black Hills is another thing. The Quakers never undertook to do that; and so the violation of that rule is not the result of the peace policy.

Mr. WINDOM. I wish to say before the Senator sits down that there are no Quakers, probably, within five hundred miles of there.

Mr. MORTON. I did not say there were; but my friend from Kansas said there were, and he said it was because they were there, and that the theeing and thouing brought about that war. [Laughter.] The error is not mine.

Mr. INGALLS. That was merely a figure of speech. [Laughter.] It is immaterial for my argument whether it was a Quaker or a Presbyterian or a Congregationalist or an Episcopalian or a Catholic or any other man of the gown and the stole. I used the Quaker as an illustration, as a representative man, as opposed to the man of arms, to the strong hand.

But in regard to the action of the Department and of the authorities here upon this question originally, I beg to say to the Senator from Iowa that he is entirely mistaken in alleging that there was any proclamation made warning those people out of the hills. They were told that they had better not go in until arrangements were made by which they could go in peaceably and lawfully. It was a very mild and feeble protest that meant but little, as is apparent by the fact that it was immediately followed by a very active immigration by the seekers after gold.

I do not understand that this proposition now before the Senate is in any way to interfere with the efforts of the religious denominations of the country to civilize, Christianize, and elevate the Indian, but I venture the assertion that there never has been a native Indian civilized or Christianized. Whenever he is civilized and Christianized he ceases to be an Indian. You may turn over the pages of aboriginal history in this country from its first bloody leaf down to its last, and there never has been a single instance of an aboriginal Indian who has ever been civilized or Christianized. Yesterday we were referred to the nations now in the Indian country, the Cherokees, the Creeks, the Choctaws, the Seminoles, and the Chickasaws. Whatever of civilization those men have they owe to their Anglo-Saxon blood. There is not an exception in that country even, and they are an entirely different type of Indian from the Algonquins and Iroquois families.

The case of the gentleman who was on the staff of General Grant during the war was also alluded to. I think his name was Colonel Parker; and he was referred to as an illustration of the fact that the Indian can be civilized and elevated; but he was a member of the New York nation of Indians, one of the Six Nations as they were called originally, and is the product of a dozen generations of civilizing influences brought to bear upon him from all the surroundings of that great and opulent Empire State. Colonel Parker is not an apt illustration of the effects of the peace policy upon the Indian in the way of civilization and refinement and Christianization! His ancestors for generations had been subject to refining influences, and he is the product of long and mature development.

Some races are plastic and can be molded; some races are elastic and can be bent; but the Indian is neither; he is formed out of rock, and when you change his form you annihilate his substance. You cannot civilize the Indian, and all efforts that are made to do it will be as expensive as they are nugatory and futile. Civilization destroys the Indian, absolutely destroys him, and the sooner the country understands that all these efforts are valueless unless they are based upon force supplemented by force and continued by force, the less money we shall waste and the less difficulty we shall have. It is force that the Indian respects, and not the Bible or the primer. It is the armed hand of the soldier, and not the gown and book of the missionary or of the apostle.

I admit, sir, that in the aspect in which this case now presents itself there is some embarrassment. We have established the precedent of not making general legislation upon appropriation bills. The Senator from Indiana referred to that, and I think very properly; but I now propose to obviate that difficulty by a motion that I shall shortly submit. The Committee on Indian Affairs this morning reported House bill No. 2677 with the recommendation that it be postponed until the Thursday after the first Monday in December next. At my suggestion the bill was laid upon the table, where it lies subject to the action of the Senate. It involves precisely the question that is now under consideration on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the third section of the general Indian appropriation bill. I am exceedingly reluctant to embarrass in any way the progress of this bill. I shall endeavor not to do so. I shall throw no obstacles in the way of a conclusion of the argument upon this question; and in the motion that I am about to make I beg the Senator from Minnesota to understand that in my opinion a result can be just as well reached by the course that I propose as by the one that is now proceeding before the Senate. I move, therefore, for the purpose of enabling the Senate to proceed with the consideration of House bill No. 2677, that the bill now before the Senate be postponed, and upon that question I ask a vote.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, that motion is open to debate, I believe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROBERTSON in the chair.) It is.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On that proposition I desire to submit a few general observations on the condition of this bill. I want to invite the attention of the Senate to the proposition contained in the bill, and examine in a few brief moments our obligations to the bill as an appropriation bill; then, what is proposed in regard to it, and the effect of that proposition.

This is an appropriation bill. We have drifted so far away from it that I am afraid honorable Senators have forgotten what we really are attempting to do and what our duty on that subject would seem to be in these last few days of this fiscal year. It is about seven months now from the beginning of this session, and within eight or nine days of the close of this fiscal year. We have spent two days in discussing abstract propositions as to the civilized and barbarian races, referred to by my honorable friend from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] yesterday. Let us now consider what our obvious and plain duty is. Let me read the title to this bill: "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes." That implies an obligation, does it not? It implies treaties, and it implies obligations resulting from treaty stipulations. We have promised that we would do certain particular things in regard to the Indian tribes; not a new promise, but a promise extending back further than the existence of this Government. We began to make these stipulations, as referred to by the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN,] before we were a Government. We have continued it down to this time. These obligations rest upon us, rest upon us as treaty stipulations; and, in a moral sense, so touchingly alluded to by the Senator from New Jersey, they rest upon us to pay the most solemn of our obligations, notwithstanding the taunts and the sneers of my honorable friend who sits near me [Mr. INGALLS] about the savage ferocity of the Indians. We cannot afford as a Christian nation to stand here in the Senate of the United States and give utterance to such sentiments. They will get no response from the American people, nor from any Christian heart anywhere. The time was, and history records it too—my honorable friend is mistaken about history—that three million red men hunted over these hills and these mountains, and in the providence of God they owned this country, and we were the invaders. It ill becomes us to talk as we do here, when we have driven them from pillar to post, till now they are in their extremity, and the question is whether we will take the life or whether we will feed the remnant of these poor scattered, fugitive bands of Indians, men, women, and children, utterly within our power, whether we will crush them to the earth or whether we will allow them to linger out that miserable doom in which the honorable Senator from Kansas I will not say seems to take a pride in pointing to. Such sentiments shock me. I admit they shock me.

Mr. INGALLS. To what sentiments does the Senator allude?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Those that have been uttered by my honorable friend to-day and by the Senator from Missouri yesterday. What on earth has all this to do with the business of to-day here? Here we are, as if there were no responsibilities upon us, trifling with all the great interests of this country, which hang now upon the duties which we shall perform in these next seven days in regard to all the civil service of this country. And my honorable friend feels himself at liberty, belonging to the majority of this body who are responsible for the conduct of the business of the Senate, to introduce a proposition which he knows cannot be discussed with any propriety whatever without jeopardizing the highest interests of this country. Our duty is to do what? To appropriate for the fulfillment of certain treaty stipulations. We are under high, solemn obligations to the Indians, as high and as solemn as we can make, as mortal men exercising the high functions of government can make by treaty stipulations, and as high and holy as a great people can be subjected to to a perishing and feeble and devastated race. That is our position to-day, sir. What have we undertaken to do in those treaties? We have undertaken to help the Indians. We have undertaken to civilize the Indians. We have taken their lands everywhere. They are now on a few fragmentary sections of land, here and there. We have pledged our faith to them and said to them that having taken their lands we will make their fate just as comfortable as we can.

Let me read a moment from the bill in order to give you an idea of what these obligations are. The very first treaty which we propose to fulfill gives an epitome of the whole obligation of this Government in regard to this miserable and perishing race, as it has been characterized here. Let us see what we undertake to do and what my honorable friend pretends to invoke the Senate to turn over to the Army to execute. Let us see whether the function is that of the civil or the military. What do we propose to do? What are we bound to do? What do these treaty stipulations require that we shall do? What do humanity, justice, even decency—I will put it on that ground—require us to do? Let me read:

Under the tenth article of treaty of October 21, 1867, concluded at Medicine Lodge Creek, in Kansas, &c., and under the third article of treaty of the same date, &c.

What do we agree to do?

For purchase of clothing, as provided in the same treaty, $15,000.

Mr. INGALLS. I presume the Senator from Maine does not wish to put me in a false attitude before the Senate. I am making no objection to the paying of treaty stipulation, nor any objection whatever to any appropriations presented in this bill. On the contrary, I am in favor of their immediate constant payment, in accordance with the strictest demands of good faith.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. All right; I am glad to hear that. Let me come to the next item:

For pay for a carpenter—

The Army will do that, says my honorable friend, a great deal better—

Farmer——

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine declines to yield.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will not do the Senator any injustice.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator decline to yield?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I decline to yield.

Mr. INGALLS. The Secretary declines to yield?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No, sir; the Senator declines to yield.

Farmer—

O, but the Senator says the Army are all farmers; they can do this work just as well and better, and it will not cost anything either!

Blacksmiths—

They are all blacksmiths, brought up to that, from the major-general down to the sergeant! They have agreed to do this. The Army are the proper instrumentalities. That was expected, that was implied in the treaty! It was expected to be done at the hands of the Army, of course! Those were the instrumentalities to be invoked when we made these solemn treaties! We are not violating any treaty when we propose to turn these Indians over to the Army; and we are not violating any pledge at all! They are all blacksmiths!

Mr. BOGY. Turning over the Bureau to the Army makes no changes in that respect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will not yield to anybody.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator is unyielding.

Mr. BOGY. The Senator ought to know better than——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine declines to yield.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will hear what the Senator from Missouri says.

Mr. BOGY. I say the transfer of the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department makes no change in the respect to which he is referring.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will show my honorable friend that I know what I am about, if I do not know any better. I will pay my respects to him directly.

Mr. BOGY. Very well, and I will pay them back.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I understand what I am doing on that matter. I have paid some little attention to this subject, first and last. Let us see.

Miller—

We provide for a miller. Of course the Army can do that!

And engineer—

That I concede they might do. Then—

For pay of physician and teacher.

Bless my soul, cannot all these things be done by an army?

That is what we have undertaken to do, and this bill is full of it. Let us see how many we have of this kind, what we have employed, what these stipulations require, what they demand of us. Let us see what our treaty stipulations are to this dying and perishing race whom my honorable friend from Missouri calls barbarians. They must perish, he says, no matter what we do; we will make it as easy and comfortable for them as possible; but their fate is inevitable; it is no use to do anything at all; there never was and never will be a civilized Indian, for the logical reason suggested by my honorable friend who sits at my right [Mr. INGALLS] that the moment you make him a civilized Indian he is no Indian at all.

Mr. INGALLS. That is true.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Well, that may be; but it is singular logic.

Mr. INGALLS. It may not be logic, but it is a fact.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have seen Indians who entertain sentiments not half as barbarian as I have heard expressed on the floor of the Senate in regard to the Indian race. Let us go on with the question of what we have undertaken to do. We have undertaken to civilize these Indians, to help them, and we have agreed specifically how we will help them. When I come to consider the proposition to turn this Bureau over to the Army, I will address myself to my honorable friend on my left [Mr. BOGY] and show what he does propose to do. I do not believe that my honorable friend has read these provisions, because I know his comprehension when he undertakes to read a thing and understands it. These treaties provide for one hundred and fifty-two common laborers to help these people in their way of farming. They provide for two hundred and thirty-three skilled laborers. Is not the Army full of them? Would it not be a nice thing to open a recruiting office for two or three hundred skilled laborers to enlist as soldiers and to be under the direction of the Army to civilize these Indians? That is what our treaty stipulations provide for, certainly. Very well, let us go on. Teachers, doctors, one hundred and seventeen are provided for by those treaties and employed in the duty and office of educating these poor children. Does anybody undertake to say here in the presence of the Senate that it is a fulfillment of the treaty stipulations to turn that service over to the Army? That is what this bill is.

Let us look a little further. The treaties provide for seventy-seven interpreters. If you are not going to have any civilization, perhaps you do not need the interpreters. I should think not; and if the thing goes to the Army, we had better not have anybody to interpret the transactions between the Army and the Indians.

Mr. CONKLING. The Army would not interpret; they would execute.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Ah! they would execute and interpret, and interpret and execute.

Mr. MORTON. They would execute first.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Alas for them! Alas for the annals of these days and of this country, if that thing should be done. In Heaven's name, if it must be done, let us have no interpreters at hand to interpret the proceedings or report them. The treaties provide for eighty agents. What do you want with agents if you have an army?

Mr. INGALLS. We propose to dispense with them.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I know you do. I understand that perfectly; but who are to be the substitutes?

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator will read House bill No. 2677 he will find out who are to be the substitutes.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am talking about the bill before the Senate. I will pay my respects to my honorable friend when I come to speak of what the Senator proposes to offer. I am not considering that bill, nor is anybody else considering it. There may be very proper things in it, and there may be very improper things in it. What I say is that we have no time at all to consider whether it is good or not. Our business now is with this appropriation bill and nothing else. We are not here to consider policies or politics; we are here to know our duty in regard to these Indians under these treaty stipulations and to perform it. There are six hundred and ninety-eight all told, teachers, blacksmiths, farmers, skilled laborers, and common laborers.

Mr. WINDOM. And that includes a number of matrons provided for under the treaties, I will say to my friend, and I ask how the soldiers are to perform their duties?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir; there will be matrons too.

You see that by treaties we have taken upon ourselves the obligation of an effort to civilize the Indians. Is not that true? We have pointed out the agencies to be used. They shall have doctors, they shall have farmers, they shall have ministers, they shall have mechanics, they shall have teachers, they shall have the instrumentalities of civilization put into their hands, and we will stand behind them. Under this condition of things schools have grown up. Ten thousand Indian children are educated day by day and year by year in these schools. In the name of Heaven, will the Senate of the United States turn those children over to the Army?

Mr. BOGY. Of course nobody means that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My honorable friend says that of course nobody wants that done, and yet he made a two hours' speech in favor of doing it. I will read further in a moment, without bandying words on that point. The Senator certainly did advocate the proposition in this bill, and he cannot deny it. I will show what it means. There are ten thousand of these children, but they are savages and they cannot be civilized! To civilize an Indian is to exterminate him! That is the logic of my honorable friend. He says they are not elastic, not supple; that they are made of stern, ribbed rocks; that they are hewn up out of the solid rocks. The honorable Senator from Kansas said that that is the character of the Indian; that he is indocile, unteachable; that the moment you undertake to civilize him he is no longer an Indian. The logic of that in turning him over to the War Office is to exterminate him, and the quicker the better. That is the kind of logic which I heard this morning, and which I heard from my honorable friend from Missouri yesterday. The logic of it, if you believe all that, is to give him the most speedy and the easiest death at hand. That is not the humanity of this age. That is not the great duty that devolves upon this great people who have succeeded to the inheritance of these Indians. I should be pained if I thought the great bulk of the American people would agree to that. I should think it was a sorry time for the people of this country when a peace policy has been established which has been characterized here in no glowing terms, in no worthy terms, to say the least of it, when the religious heart and the philanthropic heart of this country have entered into the subject of Christianizing and civilizing these primitive tribes, if now the Senate of the United States would be willing to turn the whole over to the executioner. That is the evangel of death, think of it as you will. The policy which necessarily springs from the third section of the bill inaugurates the evangel of death touching the Indians in all the domain of this country.

Let me see whether I have been mistaken. In no sense, I say to my honorable friend from Missouri, is this a turning over of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. It is an utter extinction, an utter abolition of the entire Indian service as provided for by these treaty stipulations and by various statutes of the country, as I will proceed to show. It has been argued here that this is simply a transfer of the Indian service, Bureau and all, over to the War Department, so that it shall fall under the supervision of the head of the War Department instead of the supervision of the head of the Interior Department. I invite the attention of the Senate to the third section. Let me read:

That the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby abolished—

That is the way it starts. That does not look much like a transfer—and the salary heretofore paid to such officer shall cease, and the offices of superintendents of Indian affairs, clerks to the same, of agents and special agents, interpreters, inspectors, and all other employés of the Indian Bureau are hereby—

What? Transferred to the War Department? No; they are to be—hereby abolished.

What becomes of your Indian service? It is to be absolutely and unqualifiedly, from the beginning to the end, abolished, rubbed out. The whole conversation has been about transferring the entire service over to the supervision of the War Department. Let us go on a little further and see what it is proposed to do. What is the next step?

And the duties now intrusted to, and performed by, said officers, of every kind and description, shall be performed by officers, soldiers, and employés of the Army.

How? Under what rules and regulations, under what treaty stipulations, under what law, under what statutes?

Shall be performed—

Allow me to repeat—

by the officers, soldiers, and employés of the Army, under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Under his direction. By what laws? Let us see:

And they shall receive no additional pay by reason of the performance of the duties aforenamed, thus transferred to them, other than the pay they may receive as officers and employés of the Army; and the Secretary of War shall assign them their duties in connection with the supervision, control, and management of Indian affairs, under such regulations as the President may prescribe.

Now what have you got? Instead of a well-defined service regulated by law, prescribed by law, in harmony with your obligations under your treaty stipulations, you propose to abolish the whole of it, rub it out, and turn the Indians over to the War Department. All your relations which I have enumerated would have to be performed by the officers and the soldiers and the employés of the Army, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may make, subject to the direction of the President of the United States. That is not only turning over your civil functions to the Army, but it is turning over the execution of your treaties. It is turning over to these executors, these fearful executors of the Army, all these high and holy functions which the Government of the United States has pledged itself to perform in regard to this fast-fading and perishing race of men. That is what you are doing. That is what this provision is. Does my honorable friend from Missouri think I am mistaken now about the force and effect of this proposition, about the purpose of it, the scope of it, the inevitable result of it? Nobody can doubt it.

Is there not another party in this case? In the name of heaven, what right have we to devolve this duty upon the Army of the United States? Did the officers and the men who enlisted in the Army to carry the flag and defend the country against its enemies contract to become missionaries and millers and school-teachers and divines and doctors and all that sort of thing, to go into the Indian schools and take care of these children? If they had any capacity for it, is there anybody here or anywhere who would say it was not an outrage to undertake to devolve any such thing as that upon the Army of the United States?

Mr. MERRIMON. They are not to do it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No; they will not do it, of course.

Mr. MERRIMON. I say this proposed statute does not provide for any such thing as that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hear what the honorable Senator says, and the Senate has heard what I have said. That is the inevitable effect of it. Let us see further:

And the duties now intrusted to and performed by said officers, of every kind and description, shall be performed by officers, soldiers, and employés of the Army, &c.

Mr. MERRIMON. How broad is that? It embraces not only all the Army, but it embraces school-teachers, blacksmiths, teachers, preachers, and all classes of people necessary to carry out the treaties.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Perhaps that is a contradiction of what I have said. That is the proposition, as I understand it, and we have spent these last two days in considering that proposition upon an appropriation bill, the simple duty and high obligation of which are that we shall make appropriations according to the treaty stipulations which are recited in this bill.

I submit, therefore, to the Senate that the simple duty to-day of the Senate of the United States is to provide for the service according to the treaty stipulations; and if the Senate knows its duty and performs it, I beg to say that it will ignore at this late day in the session of this Congress all questions which give rise to debate upon the character of a service about which there is so much diversity of opinion as there is about this, in regard to which discussion is so endless, as it would seem to be.

One word in regard to the proposition of my honorable friend from Kansas. While in the midst of the consideration of an appropriation bill my honorable friend makes a motion to postpone the consideration of that bill with a view of considering a distinct public service.

Mr. INGALLS. It is the same thing.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not mean to say it has no relation to this bill; but I mean to say that he undertakes to postpone a bill of exigent necessity in the last hours almost of the fiscal year, in the last days certainly of the fiscal year, in order to invite the Senate to a discussion of a proposition fraught with many difficulties, dangers, and divisions, the end of which nobody can see. He proposes to postpone this bill while we go on and consider that proposition. I hope the Senate of the United States will not do that thing. Let us pass this bill. Let us divest it of this objectionable feature of legislation, and go on and make the appropriations implied in our treaty stipulations; and then, at the earliest moment, I say to my honorable friend, I will second his movement to bring the subject of the bill he has so much at heart to the attention of the Senate. I will vote with him the earliest moment when we are not embarrassed by an appropriation bill, which I think ought to have precedence. In that sense I ask that we ought none of us to feel justified at this period of the session in thrusting anything into one of these appropriation bills which will hinder it for any considerable time whatever. I say at the earliest moment that the Senate can have an opportunity to take up that bill, when it does not interfere with an appropriation bill, I will vote to bring it to the attention of the Senate. I say that to my honorable friend in the hope that he will not urge us to lay this bill aside in order to enter upon the consideration of the proposition which he has submitted.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to detain the Senate, and I beg to say that I am not unconscious that it implies a larger amount of intrepidity than most men are supposed to possess to differ with the Senator from Maine, who is so soon to deprive us of the light of his countenance and the benefit of his suggestions in this body. A sense of duty, however, to myself and my constituents compels me to venture to express the opinion that the remarks he has made in opposition to the matter now pending upon my motion evince a total misapprehension and misconception of the subject before the Senate. If declamation were argument, I should think, indeed, that our case was hopeless, for I can say of the effort that has just been made by the Senator from Maine it certainly was vox. I should be unwilling to add it was præterea nihil; but when he assumes that by the attempt to transfer the Indian administration to the War Department we propose that every miller and blacksmith and matron shall be an enlisted man, he certainly is going into the region of fancy. Why cannot a quartermaster hire a miller or a teacher or a blacksmith? What is there in the nature of the constitution of the Army that prevents its officers from paying out their annuities in money or in goods to the various Indian tribes? Certainly, under ordinary circumstances, if that kind of argument had been advanced against any other bill on this floor, I should say that a commission de lunatico inquirendo ought to be issued at once.

That is an absolute, total misstatement and misapprehension of the bill. There is no intention whatever to make these millers and teachers and physicians and matrons enlisted men in the Army, but simply to provide that the disbursements under these treaties, the payment of these annuities, the hiring of these employés, shall be under the direction of the officers of the Army. We have fully as good a guarantee of their capacity to do this work and their honesty to carry out the provisions of the laws as we have had during the last eight years in the administration under the peace policy.

The sentiments of the Senator from Maine are such as are uniformly entertained by those people who have got rid of their Indians. If the honorable Senator had made the speech that he delivered to-day one hundred and fifty years ago, if he was living then in Maine, he could not have gone back to his constituency. They would have burned him in effigy. That was the time when the pioneers of Maine were getting rid of the aborigines; when they were carrying on their warfare, when their pioneer settlers were being slaughtered and massacred, and their wives and children hurried into captivity, but having obtained the whole territory of that State, nothing being left but the euphonious names and appellations which the Indians appended to the rivers, lakes, and mountains of his State; having driven the Indians from frontier to frontier, he now is exceedingly anxious that there should be no effort made to harass and destroy the happiness of this last lingering remnant of a once proud people.

There are two aspects in which this question is viewed. One is practical and the other is sentimental. One is entertained in the East and one in the West. One is entertained by men who have got rid of their Indians, and the other by men who are subjected to their atrocities. During the last eight years, in which the peace policy has been in force under the present Administration, not less than one hundred and fifty of the citizens of my State have been brutally and outrageously butchered. They were not men who were invading Indian reservations; not men who were engaged in harassing the Indian tribes, but men who were in the peaceful avocations of life, who had every guarantee to maintain peaceful relations with the Indians, who had their wives and their children and their property at the skirmish-line of civilization. By the operations of this peace policy not less than one hundred and fifty citizens of my State who had been invited thither by the Government itself and assured of protection have been massacred, their property destroyed, and their wives and children hurried into a brutal and revolting captivity.

Do you suppose that those who have experienced these bitter results of the peace policy of the Quaker system are inclined to regard it with any particular approbation? Do you suppose that they are inclined to listen with patience to appeals such as have been made by the Senator from Maine? On the contrary, those who have been wronged and outraged believe, and I, as their representative, believe that we have had enough of this; that any change will be for the better; and that the best time to consider whether this change shall be made is now. The Senator goes into eloquent periods in regard to the necessities of the country upon the appropriation bill. He says it is wrong to delay for an instant, in the expiring hours of this session, the consideration of an appropriation bill. The lives and property of the citizens of the frontier are of infinitely more importance than appropriation bills; and before I shall consent to vote more money for the payment of Indian annuities, or for the civilization and Christianization of the Indian tribes, I shall insist upon the protection of citizens of my State by the transfer of this Bureau to the War Department, believing that it at least offers us the promise of something better in exchange for the wrongs that we have suffered during the last eight years.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not desire to make a speech, but to say that if the proposition of the Senator from Kansas shall fail, I shall then propose to offer as an amendment to this bill the bill which this morning was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs. That would bring us to a direct vote and test the sense of the Senate upon the mere question of transfer.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate for any length of time; but I have had some interest in this peace policy toward the Indians. In the other branch of Congress I was upon the Committee on Appropriations at the time it was adopted. It was the belief of those who inaugurated it that it was a change of policy. The Indians had been then a year and a half under the War Department, practically under the mangement of the President. That management and the result of it were not such as to satisfy even him, so closely as he had been connected with the Army, and who had as much pride in its character and confidence in its executive efficiency and its ability to perform the civil functions of the Government as any other man. It was through consultation with him and with those religious societies that took a special interest in the matter that the provision which turned the attention of the public to another method of dealing with the Indian was adopted. I drew that provision myself. It was inserted in an appropriation bill which I had charge of in the other House. I felt in reference to it that light was breaking in upon a dark subject; that a policy which hitherto had been surrounded with difficulty and attended with obstacles which seemed almost insurmountable was at last finding a healthy, a moral, and a hopeful solution. It was accompanied with a considerable reduction in the appropriations of that year. So far as I have been able to follow the appropriations since, while large expenditures in reference to the Indians and accompanying appropriations have certainly been made, yet so far as the policy then inaugurated has been concerned it has been attended all along with a reduction of expenditures.

It is said by those who are now proposing this change of administration that they are not proposing any change of policy. Certainly the sentiments advocated by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] are new. They are new within the life-time of my service in Congress. For the first time have I heard it proclaimed that the Indian has no more rights in this country than the snake and the frog; that God has given this country, and the very land that the Indian occupies, to the white man, and has given the Indian no rights there or elsewhere in this land. Who has made us the giver? In what light, I ask to know, have we the right to say to the Indian that that which he possesses is ours? I know that civilization is strong and advancing, and that savage life must yield to it; but I do not know that civilization has a right to wrench from those not blessed with its privileges, with its light and its culture and its education, that which they possess. The very soil upon which the Senator from Kansas himself was born was purchased of the Indians. Winthrop, and Endicott, and Brewster, and Robinson entertained two hundred and fifty years ago no such doctrine as the Senator from Kansas has advocated upon this floor. The title-deeds to the very ground upon which he was born are recorded in Massachusetts. Pennsylvania, every rood of it, was purchased of the Indians by William Penn. The State that the Senator from Kansas himself represents has been purchased from the Indians at a great cost by this Government. Yet the Senator from Kansas stands up here and tells us that the Indians have no more rights there than the frogs and the snakes, and, however much he may himself complain of the remark I made, he demonstrates, so far as he can by argument, that the Indian has no rights, in his judgment, that the white man is bound to respect. I do not contend against the great law of civilization to which he must yield; but in compelling him to yield to it we forget that the brightest of all the jewels in its crown should be justice. He has got to yield to it. As the advancing wave that the Senator has described is moving to the westward, there is coming up another one from the shores of the Pacific, and he is to be overwhelmed between the two. It is said of the Spanish inquisition that among its instruments of torture and extinction there was one by which the martyr was placed in the center of the building and there chained between two approaching walls, from the advance of which on either side it was impossible for him to escape, and with his fate before his eyes he was compelled to await the result. Such may be the fate of the Indian between these two waves of civilization; but I beg of the Senator from Kansas not to so far forget the title-deeds of his ancestors as to come here and in the Senate of the United States proclaim that the mission of civilization is to demonstrate to the world that these people have no rights in the land.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator be kind enough to state what the compensation was for the soil that was purchased in Massachusetts from the original proprietors?

Mr. DAWES. A very small sum was given for the town of Haverhill, but it was all that it was deemed worth by those who possessed it and whose ownership to it was acknowledged by those who purchased it and took the title-deed and recorded it in the county of Essex, Massachusetts. They did not tell the Indian to get out of this possession because he had no more right to it than the frogs and snakes and that he was to be civilized as the rattlesnake in the forests and wilds of the West is civilized. They did not treat with him so. Penn did not treat with him so. Chief Justice Marshall, in his opinion delivered in the Supreme Court upon the rights of the Indians in Georgia, had no such idea of their rights to the land they occupied. Mr. President, your ancestors taught a different lesson when they took their lives in their hands and went forth from the State that bought every rood that it now possesses from the Indians to attempt to brave the hardships of frontier life in the effort to civilize the Indians.

The doctrine advanced by the Senator from Kansas should come from some other source, from some other teaching, from some other blood. It seems to me to be so in conflict with every pulsation of the heart that is good, so at war with all the teachings of humanity and of education, that the Senator will permit me, with all respect, to express my protest and at the same time my wonder that he saw anything strange in the remark of mine that he was teaching the doctrine that the Indians had no rights that the white man was bound to respect. What right, according to his theory and his argument, can he find in all he said and in all he maintained here? What right has he left the Indian but the right of extinction? What is strange, then, in the remark that he was teaching a doctrine that the Indian had no rights which the white man was bound to respect? I know the enormities that have been committed by savages upon border life; I know the cruelties to which settlers are often exposed, and I know how difficult it is for us in the Eastern States to comprehend the state of things there; but I am compelled to believe that in many instances it is brought upon them by just such sort of teaching as we hear to-day, that the red man has no rights in the land and in the possessions in which he is found. Such a doctrine as that can bring upon its advocate nothing except the results which the Senator from Kansas himself has so graphically described. When he tells the savage, in the peaceful possession of the lands that he has occupied since the beginning of the world, for aught the Senator from Kansas and myself know, that he has no right to the little home and wigwam, humble as it may be, which he occupies at night when he comes home from his hunting-ground, except that right of self-defense which is planted as well in the Indian as in the white man, what is to be expected? If there be no desire to change the policy of the Government, what does this anxiety, this distress mean? Why is it proposed to lay aside the appropriation bills in the last hours of the session to take up a bill to make this transfer if it be simply to effect a change of persons to carry out the same measures in the administration of an established policy? The very anxiety and the very earnestness which back up the argument, as well as the argument itself, demonstrate that there is an intention and that there is a purpose best defined in its character and in its effect by the Senator from Kansas himself in this effort to turn over the administration of the Indian policy to the War Department.

The Indians are in the way; they do not diminish as fast as could be desired; they were half a million two hundred years ago, and the Senator from Kansas tells us that they are 300,000 now. He is discouraged with the policy under which he tells us they are to-day increasing in spite of all hope and expectation and promise of the past. According to the accounts that were given us yesterday, there is little prospect of that "consummation devoutly to be wished," when the last of all the Indians may be found upon the earth, when "the only good Indian is the dead Indian." The schools that are established, the churches that are built, the frames of government that are adopted in the Indian country, and the men of education and of influence and of character that are found among them give the Senator from Kansas little hope that the day is soon to come when the last of the Indians in this country shall be found. I admit that. I admit that if such be the purpose there must be a change of policy. I admit another thing: there must be a change of this peace policy or there will be no occasion for Indian wars that carry along with them such fruit in their train, that open up new reservations, extinguish Indian titles in reservations, and open up lands for railroads or for any other purpose. Certainly there must be a change of policy, or we shall have less of these opportunities for spreading civilization over Indian reservations.

I am reminded that there has not been a session of Congress in the last twenty years which has not been full of bills for the purpose of extinguishing Indian titles to lands; and yet the Senator from Kansas tells us that the Indian has no title to the land he occupies any more than the rattlesnake and the frog. What does it all mean? It means that in the contact of the good men who go out to the frontier with the Indian they forget, being the stronger and dealing with the weaker, that there is a double injunction upon them like that which rested upon William Penn, John Winthrop, Endicott, Brewster, and Robinson, to deal justly with them, to take care not only that they should have faith kept with them, but that there should be no appearance of an attempt to overreach them.

So long as the spirit which pervaded the men who dealt with th Indians in early times prevailed in this country there were no Indian wars. Why is it that across the border in Canada the Indians are at peace with the government under which they live? Why was it that for fifty or a hundred years in Alaska there never was heard of an Indian disturbance of the slightest account; but after we became the owners of Alaska the Army of the United States had not been there six months before we had an Indian war upon that virgin Territory for the first time in all its history? Why is it that such a spirit so seems to possess those in this country who go among the Indians that the Indian himself becomes at once alarmed, not only for the safety of his possessions, but also for his life and for those whom he loves? No more striking illustration of the folly, the perversity, and the terrible consequences of the policy with the Indian which it is now proposed to re-adopt in this country can be found than comparing it with that upon our border, to which I have alluded, and to that in the Russian possessions right before our eyes, which had remained for years and for centuries in peace and quiet as undisturbed as any civilized people upon the face of the earth. No man ever went there and taught the doctrine that the Senator from Kansas has stood up here and preached to-day. He would not have been tolerated in preaching it. The permission was only given to him and to those missionaries who carried civilization upon the bayonet into the territory when the territory became ours.

I deprecate all this effort to depart from a policy in the spirit in which this peace policy was established, it having the sanction of those most experienced in Army life, who had the most confidence of all in the honor and integrity of the Army, and who yet felt that it was not fit for the Army to take charge of the Indian policy of the country.

Senators on the other side tell us that little hope of civilization exists at all in our treatment of the Indians; at any rate that it is a long and difficult and discouraging work. So it is, sir. It is but five years since this policy was adopted; it has hardly had a fair trial. No permanent fruit resulting from it could have been expected in the short trial of four or five years. It were better not to have adopted it at all than to adopt and then abandon it in this way. It originated, as I have said, with the Executive in co-operation with the most benevolent and high-toned and devoted Christian men of the country. With no interest pecuniarily; with no hope of reward; with no official honor to attain, they turned aside from the peaceful walks of life and tendered their gratuitous services to the country, and they were accepted by the Government, and they have gone to their work; and so far as the Government has upheld their hands and sustained them in that work there is every reason for encouragement, both in the effect it has had upon the Indians themselves and in that which is quite as necessary upon those who live upon the border and in the effect which it has had upon the current expenses of the Government. No single argument has been urged for the change, except that urged in the spirit which characterized the recent debate upon the motion to lay aside the appropriation bill and at once address ourselves to the abandonment of this policy, while all things else in legislation should stop. I think the people of this country will say that those reasons are not quite sufficient; are not quite in harmony with the convictions and the conscience and the heart of the American people; certainly not quite enough so in harmony for the American people to think it best to stop all other legislation while this change can be initiated.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, I feel and take a warm interest in this debate; and, although the day is far spent, I will venture to add a few remarks to what has already been said.

If I could believe, if I could be convinced, that the proposition to transfer the Indian Bureau to the War Department was calculated in any sense to injure the Indian race, I should be as far from giving my support to that proposition as any Senator upon this floor. I have no hostile feeling to the Indian. On the contrary, I have the warmest sympathy for him. I believe that he has suffered all the ills which Senators have told us he has suffered, and more besides. I believe it is impossible for the pen of civilization to describe in adequate terms and colors the sufferings and outrages to which the poor Indians have been subjected by the white race. I have no desire to contribute further to such injury, persecution, and outrage. On the contrary, above all things in this respect, I desire to be a humble instrument in bettering their condition. My desire and purpose toward them are peace and good will. I wish to benefit them, to bless them, to civilize them, to make them happy and prosperous; and I will go as far as any one in advocating and supporting any line of policy toward that end; and all I want to know in that behalf is the truth, and govern my action by it; and I think this debate ought to lead to that end, and to no other, and that we ought to meet every issue and every question that the debate on this proposition presents in a spirit of candid fairness, so that we may ascertain the real merits of the proposition before the Senate.

I do not concede—and those who oppose this proposition seem to take it for granted—that the proposed transfer of the Indian Bureau will have the effect attributed to it. It does not propose war upon the Indians; it does not propose to take from him by force or stratagem that which belongs to him; it does not propose to cut him off from the means of civilization. On the contrary, I maintain that the effect of it will be to promote his interests in that respect, and place the civilizing means, which have heretofore been extended for his benefit, to greater advantage in that direction. I dissent entirely from the views expressed by the honorable Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] as to the Indian's incapacity for civilization. I do not concur in the doctrine that he is hewn out of a rock, and that you cannot bend him, but must break him, must exterminate him. In the first place, it is unnatural to so believe; and I know by some experience and considerable observation that his views are radically erroneous. In my own State there are about twenty-three hundred Cherokee Indians. Though they cannot to-day be measured by the highest standard of civilization, still they are far advanced in that direction. It may be said they are civilized. They voluntarily live in houses, cultivate their own fields; they have schools and churches; they have preachers and teachers, and all of their own race. They exhibit in their lives a high sense of right and wrong.

The Indian is capable of civilization, of realizing, accepting, and enjoying in a high degree those humane blessings which it is competent for the white man to extend to him; and I repeat what I said a while ago, that I desire to see them extended to him and to help to extend them to him; but we ought to do this in the most judicious way; we ought to learn and adopt the most certain means to that end. We know by sad experience that the so-called "peace policy" which has prevailed for the last five years has failed, signally failed to accomplish that purpose. We have tried it and it has failed; it has injured and wronged the Indian and disgraced the nation. The Indian has been outraged perhaps as he never was before. Time after time we have been about to be precipitated upon a war with the Indians by it, and they have been robbed and plundered, in a way that is disgraceful to the American name, of the funds that have been appropriated from the national Treasury from time to time for their benefit, and their treaty rights have been violated by force and fraud. This "peace policy" agency has stood by and seen these things done, and done virtually with impunity; indeed, it has been said that this agency helped often in the perpetration of real outrage. The time has come when those who are the real friends of the Indians should step forward and devise some policy, some means by which such plunder, robbery, and crime can be suppressed; and I believe that the means proposed by the measure under consideration, when properly guarded, will effectuate that purpose.

Let us look at the matter in a practical light. Who is the Indian? He is a savage; he has no due sense of right and wrong. It may be questioned whether in his savage state he has a developed moral sense at all. He does not duly appreciate the crime of murder, arson, theft, or any crime. He is in his habits and practices more like the wild and savage beasts that roam in the forest than like civilized man. I do not undertake to say that he is a beast; far from it. I know that he is a human being; that he has a soul to be saved or lost; that he is human; but he is in such condition as that he is but little removed from the wild and savage beast that roams through the forest, and which he pursues for his livelihood.

In another view, he is somewhat like the lunatic or the madman among civilized men. How do we use such people as those? Do we adopt a "peace policy" like that which prevails among the Indians in our management of that unhappy class of our people? We know that we do not. It would be absurd to attempt such a course of conduct, ridiculous to talk about such a thing. The lunatic is arrested; the madman is arrested; force is applied to him; he is confined, not for a day, or a week, or a month, but for his lifetime if need be, not for the benefit of those who confine him, but in the discharge of that humane duty which rests upon every civilized people, which rests preeminently upon the American people who boast of their civilization and their desire to do good to all men; not only their persons are seized and confined, but their property is taken jurisdiction of by the courts of the country, and it is cared for and administered, not in the interest of society as society, not in the interest of any particular individual, or any particular class, other than the lunatic himself. The lunatic is the ward of the law; he is the ward of society. By the laws of nature, by the moral law and social rights, by the civil law of the country and civilization, he is entitled to be protected against himself, against his want of intelligence, against his want of capacity to protect himself and to protect his property. Society, the law, the Constitution protects him in his life and his liberty; it is bound to watch him, to reform and cure him and fit him for life and all engagements incident to it, and, if that cannot be done, to smooth his pathway to the grave. Society is not only thus bound to protect his life, but it is bound in good faith to protect his property and not to administer it in the interest of one person or another person, or the State, but to take care of that fund and protect it and administer it in his interest and in the interest of those who have the claims of nature upon him.

I maintain that this Government sustains a like relation to the Indian. I will not detain the Senate now to discuss how such an obligation arose; it is sufficient that it is and has been recognized for nearly a century; the Government has taken charge of the Indian, taken charge of his property; it has stipulated treaties with the Indians to so protect them. Be it said to the shame of our nation, to the shame of the American people, that those treaties are merely nominal, exacted often by force and intrigue. And even such treaties are often grossly violated, and always with impunity. The protection and benefit promised are often withheld; injury, wrong, and insult are often heaped upon them. I believe that such a course of conduct ought to be suppressed and forever; that we ought to look to and regard the right of the Indian in the matter of his land and the matter of his claims upon humanity and civilization, and particularly his rights under treaty stipulations with our Government.

But how shall we protect the Indians and their rights? Not by trifling and temporizing with them. The only effective way to do it, in my judgment, is to do as you do with the lunatic or the madman; take hold of them if need be by reasonable force; hold him, and hold him in such way as to make him feel and say that you do justly by him, so that all men and God will judge that he is so held in his own interest, and for his own benefit, and in the interest of humanity. That is the way to do it. You cannot control or manage a savage in such way as to civilize him or benefit him in any respect by temporizing with him; you must make him understand your power and feel that it is exercised for his benefit and submit to it. Why, sir, if the huntsman goes into the jungles of Africa to capture a lion or a tiger or an elephant, he does not go there temporizing with such animal and pursuing what is called here the "peace policy." He resorts at once to force and to stratagem until he gets the animal completely under his dominion, and then he treats him kindly, extends to him such benefits as he can appreciate, and the result is that by and by the civilizing effect prevails over the brute.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator from North Carolina a question?

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask it for information, and to illustrate the point he is now making. I should be glad to know the successive processes by which the eastern band of Cherokees have reached the high state of civilization which they now enjoy in his own State—if the strong arm of the Army has ever been imposed in any way upon them?

Mr. MERRIMON. There can be no question that the strong arm of the Army has been applied to them.

Mr. ALLISON. When?

Mr. MERRIMON. The Cherokees, who inhabited almost exclusively at one time the western part of North Carolina, were taken by force and removed west of the Mississippi, with the exception of a handful that hid themselves in the mountains and remained by stratagem. They have been allowed to remain there; they have grown up among the white people, and in that way the civilizing effects of association with the white man have been made manifest. I take it that if a considerable portion of the American people could go into the Indian country and live among the Indians, so that the white people would greatly prevail, a like effect would come to pass there in the course of years. But such a policy as that is utterly impracticable, and nobody proposes or suggests it.

Why, sir, you saw the same thing illustrated in the South among the negroes. When the negroes were brought to the South originally they were stolen or brought from their native country and they were savages, but the numbers of the white people preponderated. They were brought among the white people, and they were kept in subjection. When it was necessary force was applied. By and by the civilizing effects of association with the white people did its office upon them, until to-day the most civilized portion of the black race on the face of the earth is in the Southern States. That is the way civilization came to them, and that is the way it might come to the Indians if white people were permanently among them in sufficient numbers. But if our Government were to undertake to civilize a race of barbarians in Africa, and we were prepared to expend means to that end, we could not go there with a handful of preachers and teachers, however good they might be and however humane might be their purposes, and civilize them. You would have to take an army along and get hold of them by reasonable force, and then, while you hold them for their own benefit—not for their hurt—let the preacher and the teacher do their humanizing and civilizing work. To do this you must exercise force, with a strong, steady, just hand, and in such way as manifestly to benefit the party held under its dominion.

The true policy toward the Indians in my judgment—and I submit it with great diffidence—is to put the Army in charge of them under just rule and take hold of them with the strong arm of power, not violently, not in such a way as to show that you are hostile to them, that you desire to kill them, that you desire to take their land, that you desire to exterminate them, but in such a way as to show that you intend to benefit and to bless them; hold them if need be until the preacher and the teacher can go among them and do their legitimate work, protect the Indian against himself, and protect against his violence and his savagery the teacher and the preacher. That is the true policy.

But gentlemen express great fears of the Army. They say if the War Department shall take control of the Indian Bureau this will imply war and nothing but war, and that implies extermination. I deny it. Such a consequence will not follow; no one has shown that it would. I propounded a question to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] a while ago to test the force of his declamation on that point. He offered no reason in its support, and I contend no reason can be assigned to support his simple empty declaration to that effect. It seems to me that the reason of the thing is just the other way.

But why should any one dread the Army? Who are the Army? Outside of the legal profession there is no class of men in this country better educated in a general knowledge of the law than the regular officers of the Army. They are taught the law as part of their military education, and every good officer has a high sense of right. He is humane and careful of the rights of others. They are careful of the weak and helpless. Wherever we find an officer of the Army who properly understands his duty and does it, you find no man in the whole land who is more humane, who is more honest and honorable, or who has greater regard for the oppressed and the helpless than he. There is no doubt about that. But everybody does not have the same opportunity to be informed that he has. He is educated to know the law; to learn it is a part of the discipline that he undergoes in order to fit himself to command armies; and the great mass of the people, even teachers and preachers, do not understand it generally as well as he does. The soldier and the officer are not monsters; they do not necessarily mean war; they are a means to peace and right.

Mr. President, a Senator suggests to me privately that there is some disposition in the Senate to get rid of the subject in some way or other, and, if there is, I do not care to protract my remarks at this time; but if we are going to have a vote on the merits of this proposition I want to continue my remarks, for I feel a deep interest in the subject, and I do believe that some of those gentlemen who have been called humanitarians (and I believe I belong to that class myself) are in error. The right way to civilize the Indians, in my judgment, is to put the Indian Bureau under the control of the War Department, and direct the Army how their rights are to be supervised and protected; how they are to be protected against white men and against themselves; and how ample avenues shall be opened up to let preachers and teachers and every humanizing influence go in among them and have free vent. I now yield for any suggestion that those who have the bill in charge may see fit to make at this moment, with the view to expedite the business before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not the bill in charge; but in sympathy with the suggestion the Senator from North Carolina has made, and in view of the general desire to get rid of this bill, I wish to make a suggestion. I believe every Senator on all sides of the Chamber will agree that this provision, like a thousand others that might be inserted in an appropriation bill, is not harmonious in it, however good the provision may be, or however defective; and therefore the question is what we ought to do, considering the present state of the session and the fact that we all know that on the night of the 30th of June, this very month, nine days from now, the effective powers of the Indian Department and of every other Department of the Government must stop under existing law unless the appropriation bills are passed.

Since the old times when the appropriation bills ran over into July we have, in the interest of economy and the proper safeguards for public interests, passed laws without party division, united in by gentlemen of all parties, provided for protecting the public money against unauthorized expenditures, and protecting the public credit against unauthorized contracts; in other words, we have provided that the Executive Departments shall do nothing but provide for expending the money that had already been appropriated. That is the state of the law now, so that on the 1st of July, without these regular and ordinary appropriation bills of all classes, substantially the wheels of Government must stop. That, it seems to me, appeals to everybody that we must provide, as we are, under existing laws until we change them, staying here as long as it is necessary for the public interests to do so, for carrying on the Government as it is, be it ever so bad, and I do not know but that it is bad, because I will say with the utmost frankness that I have during the past autumn and winter been strongly disposed to believe that this change ought to be made under suitable and proper safeguards. But the same candor requires me to say that, after hearing the discussion and the statements about it, I am not so clear as I was; but I have not changed the impression, although I may do so.

Now, if you postpone this bill and take up the other one, where do we find ourselves? Every Senator who occupies the attitude about it that I do—and I dare say there are many—having impressions but not perfectly convinced, and certainly not prepared to determine upon a definite and carefully guarded and discussed plan, is forced to decide upon it now, is forced to go into detail from beginning to end. That will lead to long discussion. It ought to do so, necessarily and fairly. Is it not, therefore, Mr. President, wise and just to all sides of this question, to public interests in every way connected with this question and all others, to provide now for the public exigencies as the law is, and then apply ourselves diligently to making such changes in the law as the public good may seem to require?

Occupying that attitude, I appeal to the Senators who are making this motion to postpone and to those who are discussing the merits to withhold the discussion of the merits of this matter and to leave this clause out of this bill which everybody agrees as it stands in it is not perfect, is not correct, even if the principle be right, as I have said I have been inclined to believe it is, and to pass this bill upon the law as it is, and then devote ourselves with the time that may be necessary to changing the law, if on consideration we think it ought to be changed; because we are drifting day by day by an inexorable fate that carries on one day after another to a time when we shall all be sorry that, however imperfect this system and all the other systems of government may be, we have nothing to carry it on with at all.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina has yielded to me to consult the wishes of the Senate as to whether we shall take a recess or remain in session. I have no choice about the matter; but, in order to test the wish of the Senate, I move that the Senate take a recess from five o'clock until half past seven. If the recess be not taken, I hope that it may be with the understanding that we shall remain and finish the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate take a recess to-day from five o'clock to half past seven.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.]

Mr. MERRIMON. I said, Mr. President, that if it was the purpose of the Senate to pass upon the merits of this proposition, I desired to continue my remarks and make some points that I had not yet adverted to. On the other hand, if it is the purpose of the Senate to dispose of the matter as suggested by the Senator from Kansas some time since in the course of the debate, we can have the discussion over it at the time the bill he referred to shall be considered. I do not want to talk for talk's sake. I wish to contribute something toward the passage of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] appears to me to misunderstand the precise attitude of the question. This debate is not upon the amendment proposed by the committee to strike out the third section of the bill, but on the motion I made to postpone the consideration of this bill for the purpose of proceeding to act upon House bill No. 2677. I am unable to see in what respect this debate is to be shortened by the course proposed by the Senator from Vermont. I am as anxious as any Senator upon this floor to have the appropriation bills acted upon; but I do not entertain a very sanguine belief that we are to reach a concurrence between the two Houses on these bills by the 30th day of June. Therefore I do not apprehend that anything is in peril or hazard by the continuation of the debate on this subject. In any event, however, it is immaterial whether the debate proceed upon the third section of the appropriation bill or upon the motion to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2677; and if Senators are willing to postpone debate and take a vote upon that motion at once, I certainly have no objection to interpose. I would suggest that by common consent we may proceed immediately or at half past seven o'clock to vote upon the motion to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2677 without any further discussion.

Mr. MERRIMON. I did not understand the Senator's proposition.

I thought it was to strike this third section out of the bill, with the understanding on the part of the Senate that the bill that the Senator referred to would be called up at some apppropriate time and its whole merits discussed.

Mr. INGALLS. I made that suggestion last night, but it was not entertained. The amendment that is proposed by the Committee on Appropriations is to strike out the third section of the bill. I contend that the same result would be reached by moving to postpone the bill and allowing the debate to proceed on House bill No. 2677. If the Senate shall conclude that House bill No. 2677 should pass, then we can relieve the appropriation bill of all difficulties and all complications by striking out the third section.

Mr. ALLISON. Why not take the vote now on the Senator's proposition to postpone, if that is to be a test question?

Mr. INGALLS. I am entirely willing to do so.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to make only a practical observation as to the effect of a motion like that proposed by the Senator from Kansas. If whenever in the course of an appropriation bill a subject-matter that is controverted is reached the Senate then postpones the whole appropriation bill, which is always a matter of pressing exigency, in order to take up the matter that is introduced improperly and in violation of just principles of legislation on an appropriation bill, it will never be possible to end the business of the session of Congress. For instance, suppose that there is in this appropriation bill or any appropriation bill a proposition to pay certain officers to carry into execution the bankrupt law, and some Senator, finding some provision for the execution of the bankrupt law in the bill, should propose to stop, to arrest the progress of the appropriation in order to discuss the question whether the bankrupt law ought to be repealed; would that be logical? Would that be the way to progress with the public business? Suppose there was some provision here to carry into execution the laws in relation to the mints, and some Senator desirous of having silver coin issued, like myself, should propose because of the provision in the bill to carry into execution the laws relating to mints, to stop the consideration of the appropriation bill and to take up the silver bill; would that be logical, would that be right? It seems to me that the proposition of the Senator from Kansas would lead to inextricable confusion; that it is not logical. An appropriation bill is an appropriation to carry into effect existing law; and when you arrest this necessary business of legislation in order to go into collateral measures and take up collateral bills merely because the subject-matter of those bills is mentioned in the appropriation bill, it seems to me you establish a principle dangerous to legislation and which would arrest and prevent the passage of all appropriation bills necessary to carry into execution existing laws. I would not vote for such a proposition if I were ever so much in favor of it. In my judgment the Senator from Vermont expresses the true idea, that we should confine this appropriation bill to carrying into execution existing law.

This section was put on in the House of Representatives as an amendment. It changes and revolutionizes the whole system of our legislation in regard to Indian affairs. It is there standing in the way of the execution of our duty, which is to appropriate the money necessary to carry into execution existing law. It seems to me the true logic of our position is to strike that out, leaving the bill for the transfer of the Indian Bureau to its appropriate time and to its appropriate committee and to its appropriate opportunity just like many other measures of high importance are now left. I therefore should vote against any proposition of that kind even if I were in favor of the measure. I think it would be introducing a disorderly proceeding in the midst of our business and ought not to be sanctioned by a precedent such as is proposed in this case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas, to postpone the present consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 13, noes 20; no quorum voting.

Mr. INGALLS and Mr. WINDOM called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered,

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAWES, (when Mr. EATON's name was called.) I desire to say that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] and my colleague [Mr. BOUTWELL] are paired on this question. My colleague would vote against the postponement and the Senator from Connecticut would vote for it.

Mr. OGLESBY, (when Mr. MORTON's name was called.) The Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] stated to me that he was paired with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. BOGY.] How the Senator from Missouri would vote on this question I do not know, but the Senator from Indiana would vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY, (when his name was called.) I was paired upon the question of the transfer with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. MITCHELL.] He would have voted against the transfer, but I do not know how he would vote on the pending proposition, and I therefore decline to vote. Mr. MITCHELL was unwell and had to leave the Chamber.

Mr. STEVENSON, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN.] If he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. ALCORN] upon the proposition of transferring the Indian Department to the War Department, but I do not know whether he would vote to postpone the consideration of the appropriation bill. Some of the friends of the transfer say that they think he would, and therefore I decline to vote.

Mr. DENNIS. On the question of the transfer I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON,] and therefore I decline to vote.

Mr. KERNAN. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] was called away and has paired with me. He would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea" on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barnum, Booth, Caperton, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Norwood, Ransom, Robertson, Thurman, Windom, and Withers—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Howe, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Sargent, Sherman, Wadleigh, and Wright—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bayard, Bogy, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Clayton, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morton, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Saulsbury, Sharon, Spencer, Stevenson, Wallace, West, and Whyte—36.

So the motion to postpone was agreed to.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

On motion of Mr. DENNIS, the bill (H. R. No. 2799) to amend certain sections of titles 48 and 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels was recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

TRANSFER OF INDIAN BUREAU.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2677.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of five o'clock having arrived, the Senate takes a recess until half past seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate re-assembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending question, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no pending question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill introduced by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON.] It is the bill (S. No. 686) to amend the second, fourth, and fifth sections of the act entitled "An act to enforce the right of citizens of the United States to vote in the several States of this Union, and for other purposes," approved May 31, 1870, and as a substitute for sections 5506 and 5507 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. MERRIMON. I understand that just before the recess was taken the Senate agreed to postpone the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill and to take up the bill specially transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct in the fore part of his statement, that the Senate postponed the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill; but it did not take up the bill referred to. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] stated that his object in moving the postponement was to consider that bill, but the Senator did not include its taking up in his motion, because had he done so, debate would have been out of order. Debate on the merits of the question on a motion to take up the bill would have been out of order, and the Senator doubtless was careful in making his motion simply to confine it to postponing the Indian appropriation bill. The Chair should state that the Senator from Kansas rose for some purpose when the time arrived for a recess to be taken, and it became the duty of the Chair to announce the recess. The Chair did so announce it and the Senate took a recess.

Mr. MERRIMON. As the Senator from Kansas is not in his seat and a quorum is not present, with a view to a reasonable delay I move a call of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and 16 Senators answered to their names.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the absentees be called.

The Chief Clerk called the names of the absent Senators.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absentees.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms will execute the order. [A pause.] The Secretary will call the absentees.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have not the absentees been called?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They were called once, but many Senators have entered the Chamber since the call was made. There may be a quorum present now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That makes no difference, I submit, while we are executing the order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator object?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object for the time being. I want to see whether this order can be executed once or not.

Mr. INGALLS, (at eight o'clock p. m.) Is there a quorum present?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair cannot tell until report is made.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the Clerk report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. An order of the Senate is being executed.

Mr. INGALLS. I rise to inquire whether there is a quorum present?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chair cannot tell.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the Clerk to inform us.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator cannot have any communication with the Clerk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, (at eight o'clock and three minutes p. m.) The Sergeant-at-Arms reports that he has executed the order notifying Senators to be present.

Mr. INGALLS. Do I understand the Chair to say that the Sergeant-at-Arms has reported that the order has been executed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has so reported.

Mr. INGALLS. I move, then, that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We do not know that we have a quorum yet.

Mr. INGALLS. There is a quorum here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no quorum reported as yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 19, noes 13; no quorum voting.

Mr. COOPER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Several SENATORS. What is the question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The motion is to suspend proceedings under the call, there being no quorum present.

Mr. INGALLS. How does it appear that there is not a quorum present?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By the count; the division was 19 to 13, that number not being a quorum.

Mr. LOGAN. Before the roll-call proceeds I move that the Senate do now adjourn, and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yea 1, nays 38; as follows:

YEA—Mr. Norwood—1.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bogy, Booth, Christiancy, Cockrell, Conkling, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Eaton, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Logan, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, Windom, and Withers—38.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Caperton, Clayton, Conover, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Key, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Mitchell, Morton, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Spencer, White, and Wright—34.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate refuses to adjourn. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The roll-call will proceed.

Mr. ALLISON. Is there a quorum present?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is.

Mr. INGALLS. Who called for the yeas and nays?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. THURMAN. I suggest that by unanimous consent the call be withdrawn, as there is a quorum here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not propose to withdraw it. The Senate has only a bare quorum now, and I wish the yeas and nays to show whether we are going to have a quorum who will work here to-night or not.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Bogy, Booth, Cockrell, Conkling, Cooper, Cragin, Dennis, Eaton, Ferry, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, Morrill of Maine, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, Windom, and Withers—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Christiancy, Dawes, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, and Oglesby—8.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Caperton, Clayton, Conover, Davis, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Key, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morton, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Spencer, West, Whyte, and Wright—39.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator cannot vote after the result has been announced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote cannot be received.

Mr. HOWE, (at eight o'clock and sixteen minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. Now I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has not the Senate just ordered that they be dispensed with by a yea and nay vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was not a quorum voting on that question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know it; but you can dispense with the proceedings under a call without a quorum.

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly you can; but there has been a motion to adjourn in the mean time, so that business has intervened.

Mr. EDMUNDS. After we have suspended the order, there is nothing pending before the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg pardon. Did a majority vote to dispense with the call?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. Then the call is dispensed with; a majority has voted to dispense with further proceedings; and now we stand without a quorum and with no motion for a call.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is where we are.

Mr. ALLISON. Is there a majority of the Senate present?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not a quorum present according to the last vote.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I move a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HOWE. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Christiancy, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Hamilton, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Jones of Florida, Logan, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Oglesby, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, Windom, Withers, and Wright—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Conkling, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Kelly, Kernan, Norwood, and Spencer—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Caperton, Clayton, Cockrell, Conover, Cragin, Dorsey, Gordon, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Key, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, and Whyte—34.

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms——

Mr. INGALLS. I move that proceedings under the call be dispensed with, there being a quorum present.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Indian appropriation bill was postponed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe I had a motion pending.

Mr. INGALLS. I believe I had a motion pending at the time the Senate took a recess. I moved just before the Senate took its recess that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2677. I was recognized by the Chair and made the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas states that he made that motion. It was not recognized by the Chair. The Senator is incorrect in that respect; but the Senator from Kansas states that he made the motion. The Chair stated in the absence of the Senator that he had risen for some purpose when the hour for the recess had arrived and the Chair declared it. The Senator now states that he rose to make that motion. If so, the Chair will entertain it.

Mr. CONKLING. Was that bill reported to-day?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to know what the recollection of the Chair is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not entertain the motion, but the Senator from Kansas states that he made the motion. If so, the Chair feels that he should recognize it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I inquire of the Chair whether the bill the Senator from Kansas moves to take up was reported to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I say it cannot be taken up to-day. I make that point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM. Now I move to reconsider the vote postponing the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr EDMUNDS and Mr. WINDOM called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EATON, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL.] He would vote "yea" if he were here, and I would vote "nay."

Mr. KERNAN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK.] If present he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. LOGAN, (when Mr. KEY's name was called.) I understand that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEY] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. CONOVER] are paired. I do not know the fact, but I was so informed and presume my information is correct.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DENNIS. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON,] as I have heretofore stated.

Mr. INGALLS. When the name of the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] was called I omitted to state that I was paired with him. He left the Chamber this evening in ill-health, and I agreed to pair with him on this question. He would vote for the reconsideration if he were present, and I should vote against it.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Christiancy, Conkling, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Howe, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Sherman, Spencer, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Booth, Cockrell, Cooper, Goldthwaite, Harvey, Hitchcock, Jones of Florida, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, and Withers—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Caperton, Clayton, Conover, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Gordon, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, Key, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Mitchell, Morton, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, and Whyte—34.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS, (at eight o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope the Senator will not filibuster.

Mr. INGALLS. It is just as fair on one side as on the other.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Nothing of the kind has been done.

Mr. INGALLS. What else has been done all the evening?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 18, noes 23.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, being before the Senate, the question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to postpone its consideration for the present.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the five-minute rule be applied to this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made in Committee of the Whole striking out the third section of the bill.

Mr. MERRIMON. I thought the Senate agreed to postpone the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That vote has been reconsidered and the question of postponement decided negatively. The question now is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole striking out section 3.

Mr. HAMILTON. I wish to have a part of the protest of the civilized Indians in the Indian country read. It is a very thoughtful, well-digested paper, which I think deserves the consideration of the Senate. I send it up to the desk and ask to have the part I have marked read.

The Chief Clerk read from the protest by the "lawful delegates of the civilized nations of Indians of the Indian Territory, on their behalf and on behalf of the Indian race, against the passage of a law by Congress transferring them and their property to military control," as follows:

CIVILIZATION AND HUMANITY.

In the name of civilization and humanity we respectfully, but none the less earnestly, demand a hearing and fair treatment of the Government and people of the United States. You have heretofore dealt with us as men able to contract with you. You have long since plighted to us your public faith for your protection under civil control. In our oft retarded but steady march forward many of us have made commendable progress, and have a right to a proper consideration. We are physically powerless to enforce our just claims to a Christian and civilized hearing and treatment by the Government, but we feel that in this era of civil progress, in this enlightened age, and before the people of this great country, (that was once ours but is not now) we need not do more than to call on you for that justice which you alike bestow on natives and foreigners of all other races on earth who come to or reside within your limits the benefit of just treatment under the civil departments of the Government. The flag of your nation, and emblem of its power, will float more triumphantly before the world in this its centennial year when it attests that those under its peculiar protection, as we are, have been led forward, and not by military dictation forced backward, in the march of a Christian civilization.

It is a sad commentary either upon the white race or the red one if in the one-hundredth anniversary of our relations with this enlightened, Christian, and powerful people it, for supposed economic purposes, consigns us unheard to military dictation, in face of all the past treaties between the races, and for no fault of ours, but only the asserted bad conduct of its own officials.

An army, no matter how organized or of whom composed, is by the very nature of its organization and purpose the verge and not the center of civilization; and so your fathers, the founders of the Government of the United States, considered it when they wisely provided in the Constitution that the military should be subject to the civil power, and that no soldier should be quartered upon a civilian in times of peace without his consent.

The governments of all uncivilized peoples are military and despotic, while all civilized peoples establish, as a necessity to civil progress and prosperity, deliberative and representative governments, using the military as a police, only to enforce order when the civil power decides it to be necessary.

While it is desirable that the Indians who are not already so should become civilized, and under civil laws and habits, it is by the bills referred to proposed to place them under military control, where they will certainly and only learn by precept and example a renewal of their old military ideas and habits of war and idleness.

It is worse than folly to say that the Army will or can teach peace to these untutored people while it is necessarily and daily in presence of those about it training and preparing for war.

It is claimed that the military are the proper persons to teach civilization to the Indians. We would respectfully refer you to Cortez, Pizarro, and other earlier commanders, and to the military history of the United States for answer to this proposition.

The uncivilized Indians should learn daily labor in farming and stock-raising as the only vocation now open to them, neither of which the Army officers have been taught or would be willing to practice, their education and training being that of war.

These Army officers could not follow those employments and remain efficient Army officers if they would.

No worthy competent civilian would occupy a post of instruction as a farmer or stock-raiser under military dictation in business they did not understand, any more than a worthy and competent military officer would drill under a farmer or herder who was ignorant of military duties.

Drilling men for battle and drilling wheat for growing are quite different employments. If you wish to have the Indians unlearn the former and to learn the latter, the transfer of these people from civil to military control will defeat your good intentions. You will not allow white people—men, women, or children, whether native or foreign—to be governed and controlled by the military in time of peace. Why treat the Indians differently, and especially those of them who are civilized, Christianized, and educated, as are the Cherokees, Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, and Seminoles, and most others in the Indian Territory?

It is not necessarily the fault of the men composing or controlling an army or military force that renders it improper to have charge of the Indians and their property.

Mr. EATON. I desire to ask a question of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear it.

Mr. EATON. There is a five-minute rule put on the members of this body. I beg to ask if a paper can be introduced, coming from any source, with regard to the very question under discussion and that paper be read, no matter what its length may be?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It depends on the will of the Senate.

Mr. EATON. It strikes me that it is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will rule that the five minutes are not quite up. There is one minute yet left. The Chair will drop the gavel at the end of the five minutes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I ask the Chair if there is not a rule that when it is proposed that a paper be read it is at the pleasure of the Senate whether it shall be read or not; and if the Senate is willing and authorizes the paper to be read, then it must be read through?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That question has not been submitted to the Senate. The Chair understood the Senator from Texas to rise to address the Senate and to ask that this paper be read as part of his speech, and on that the Chair was ruling.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the Chair is quite right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the other question is raised, the Chair will submit it to the Senate. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading, as follows:

It is the nature and condition of things. It is on account of the purpose, education, and necessities of the Army as contradistinguished to the condition, former education, and present necessities of the Indians. It is the difference between peace and war; between preparation for peace and a preparation for war; in the great and controlling necessity of teaching the Indians, (not already civilized,) but too long accustomed to military ideas in war and in their governments, to turn from that mode of life to peaceful and industrious habits and thoughts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Texas has expired.

Mr. HAMILTON. How much more is there of the protest from the point which I have marked? I hope there will be no objection to reading the rest of it.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. I ask to have, as part of my remarks, the remainder of the paper read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts rises to address the Senate for five minutes, and asks that the reading of the paper be continued as a part of his speech.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

War, no matter whom with, is not civilization any more than a counter-irritation on the human system is the human system; though sometimes temporarily necessary, is not long to be continued. It is not used in health, nor should the military be used in time of peace.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to a point of order. I do not think that a Senator has a right to have, if there be any objection, a paper read as part of his remarks without the consent of the body. I only make the point of order, not that I do not wish to hear this paper read, but to guard against what might be an unfortunate precedent. I submit to the Chair that no paper can be read at the desk as a part of anybody's remarks without the consent of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand that any Senator objected to the reading. The Senator from Connecticut made the point that no longer than five minutes could be taken up. The Chair stated that he would arrest the reading when the five minutes were up. The Chair did so. The Senator from Massachusetts then rose to address the Senate and asked that the reading of it be continued as part of his speech, and the Chair entertained it, no Senator objecting. If the Senator from Vermont objects to the reading, the Chair will submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will then submit the question to the Senate, shall the reading of this paper be concluded?

Mr. DAWES. I withdraw the paper. I supposed the Senate would like to hear the remainder of it read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear it; but I wish to vote on the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the reading of the document be concluded?

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to make an inquiry. I did not catch from whom that paper comes.

Mr. CONKLING. From civilized Indians in the Indian Territory.

Mr. THURMAN. Let the Secretary report.

The CHIEF CLERK. The title-page of this paper is:

Protest by the lawful delegates of the civilized nations of Indians of the Indian Territory, on their behalf and on behalf of the Indian race, against the passage of a law by Congress transferring them and their property to military control.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I hope the reading will be concluded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the paper be read. I did not make the objection to prevent its reading, but in order to keep within the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was about to put the question on continuing the further reading of the paper.

The question being put, it was determined in the affirmative.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the paper, as follows:

Your Army authority is always withdrawn from any troubled section of the country so soon as peace and quiet is restored, and the people left to civil control and pursuits. Why not continue to apply the same principle to the Indians, when, as you are informed by the Indian Bureau, they are at peace?

The idleness that is unavoidable about a frontier post, and the drinking and consequent immoralities that are too common there, are not conducive to the industry and sobriety of the Indians near them.

The difference in degrees of civilization of the Indian nations and tribes demands your closest consideration. It is little encouragement to those who have made progress in civilization, education, and industry if we are to be turned back into the hands of the military, as violators of law are to the police. We earnestly hope that Congress will not treat us with so little consideration.

The civilized nations of Choctaws, Chickasaws, Cherokees, Creeks, and Seminoles are no expense to the Government now, except for one union agency, which we do not need, and which has so far not been profitable to us, and which we hope you will abolish.

NO CONFIDENCE.

No people learn well of those they do not trust, and it is a fact worthy the notice of Congress that the Indians of the frontier are not well disposed toward the Army, and we fully believe that their transfer to military control will not be conducive to peace with or prosperity of the Indians.

The many bloody massacres of Indians, including women and children, known as the Chivington, Pegan, Black Kettle, Camp Grant, and many others that could be named if necessary, have caused much distrust on their part, and their watchfulness of military movements and disturbed confidence will be continued with loss to them at this time. The scarcity of game and rapidity with which white settlements are forming around and about them, with the comparatively kind treatment they have received under the administration of President Grant, have turned their attention toward agriculture. There are but few tribes now who do not cultivate the soil to some extent.

It will be fatal to this prosperity to turn these people back again to military dictation and control.

VIOLATES THE GENIUS OF FREE GOVERNMENT.

The people, acting in honest support of the spirit of free government of the United States, and upon which it has been and now is carried on with all other peoples of whatever race or clime, must abhor this invidious distinction against the Indians, when it is not even claimed that it is for their fault but for the dishonor of civilized men; and certainly the genius of the United States Government is again invaded in the excuses offered for this transfer; for while the Government is based by its founders on the intelligence and integrity of the people, this movement is on the basis that there is no honor in civil life worthy to be trusted, and hence a transfer to the military as the only safety in the line of economy and integrity. The sequence of such position must sooner or later transfer other Bureaus, and eventually the Government itself, to military control.

If the civil officers of the United States Government are so corrupt and new ones cannot be had from civil life under the appointing and confirming powers, what will become of the Government "of the people, for the people, and by the people?" Will the great civil Government of the United States fall and become a military despotism simply because the Army officers have monopolized all the official virtue, economy, and integrity of the country? Is it true that there is such a monopoly, notwithstanding past history and recent developments? We did not think it was true, even without these developments. But it may be valuable, in this connection, to remember that the Army officers are of Adam's race, born in civil life and the ordinary way.

Such position is a sore reflection on the 40,000,000 people in your nation, and on the appointing power and Senate. We cannot indorse such doctrine as true, nor the propriety of its utterance. The Constitution of the United States places military under, and not over, the civil power, and says: "No soldier shall in time of peace be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war but in a manner to be prescribed by law."

The Constitution provides that treaties may be made with Indian tribes, and, in pursuance of this provision, three hundred and seventy-two treaties, besides other contracts, were made with them by the Government of the United States, and by these you have secured nearly all our lands; and at this anniversary of the hundredth year of your national existence comparatively few of our people survive, and though many of these are civilized, Christianized, and educated, and others on the way to that consummation of your long-professed desire for our welfare, it is now—in an evil hour of avaricious designs, against which we can, in Congress, take no part, and have no voice or power—proposed by bills reported to turn our people and their property—these people with whom the United States has treated on equal terms—over to its own military, unheard, not for their faults, but confessedly on account of the bad conduct of some of its own civil officials and in violation of treaty stipulations with us.

We will not believe that an act so fraught with evil to our race will obtain your sanction.

We know of no parallel to such backward step, and hope our race will not become the first sad example.

D. H. ROSS, Chairman;

Seminole Delegation, (by W. P. ADAIR.)

P. P. PITCHLYNN,
Choctaw Delegate.

JOEL M. BRYAN,
JNO. L. McCOY,
Commissioners of Old Settler Cherokees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, striking out the third section of the bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. I move to amend by striking out all of section 3 after the word "that," in line 1, and inserting what I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "that," in the first line of section 3, and in lieu of the words stricken out to insert:

From and after the 1st day of July, 1876, the Secretary of War shall exercise the supervisory and appellate powers and possess the jurisdiction now exercised and possessed by the Secretary of the Interior in relation to all acts of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, board of Indian commissioners, or otherwise, and shall sign all requisitions for the advance or payment of moneys out of the Treasury on estimates or accounts, subject to the same adjustment or control now exercised on similar estimates by Auditors and Comptrollers of the Treasury, or either of them.

SEC. —. That the Secretary of War shall make such details of officers of the Army as may be necessary, from time to time, to administer the affairs of the Indian branch of the War Department.

SEC. —. That commanding officers of the military geographical departments of the Army in which Indian tribes are located or living shall be ex officio in charge of Indian affairs in their respective departments, and shall, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, make such details of officers of the Army serving in their commands or on the retired list, as may be necessary, from time to time, to administer the affairs of the Indian service: Provided, That the officer detailed to take charge of Indian affairs in the War Department shall not be of lower rank than that of colonel, nor shall the officers detailed to discharge the duties heretofore performed by agents at any Indian agency be of lower rank than that of first lieutenant in the regular Army: And provided further, That the Inspector-General of the Army shall discharge the duties of inspector of Indian affairs, and shall be required to make an annual report to Congress of the numbers and condition of the Indian tribes; and such officers shall not be required to give other bonds than are now required of them by law, but shall be held responsible for any neglect of duty or maladministration thereof, and shall be subject to trial therefor by military courts-martial, according to the rules and articles of war; and the provisions of this section shall be applicable to all officers of the Army charged with duties under this act so far as responsibility for neglect of duty and maladministration thereof are concerned.

SEC. —. That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize an increase in the number, rank, pay, or allowances of officers of the Army in excess of that now provided by law, and its provisions shall be applicable to officers on the retired list of the Army, who, when on such duty, shall receive full pay and allowance of the rank in the regular Army held by them at their retirement, as prescribed by law for officers on the active list.

SEC. —. That all contracts for supplies or transportation connected with the Indian service shall hereafter be made in the same manner, and, as far as practicable, at the same time, provided for supplies and transportation for the use of the Army.

SEC. —. That the Secretary of War shall be authorized to withhold all special licenses from traders, and, under regulations to be by him prescribed, provide the times and places at which all traders complying therewith may present themselves for bargains, barter, and exchange with the several tribes, according to the laws of the United States regulating the same, and subject to the same rules and restrictions as are prescribed for traders at military posts of the Army; but he shall not have authority to authorize any person to sell arms or ammunition to any Indian, but shall prohibit the same.

SEC. —. That the offices of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, inspectors of Indian affairs, special commissioners of Indian affairs, superintendents of Indian affairs, agent and subagent in the office of Indian affairs, board of Indian commissioners, and all officials now employed under the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or Secretary of the Interior, and connected with the administration of Indian affairs, not including the clerks of the Indian Bureau, shall be abolished and cease on the 1st day of July, 1876, on which date the officers of the Army designated shall assume charge of the duties thereof, and thus become charged with all the duties now imposed by law upon the officers of Indian affairs thus superseded.

SEC. —. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, at as early a day as practicable after the 1st day of July, 1876, to cause a careful enumeration of all Indians in the United States to be made; and such census shall thereafter be retaken at his discretion, whenever there may be reasonable doubt as to the number of any Indians in any tribe or tribes; and all issues of rations shall be upon the basis of the number of Indians reported by said enumerations.

SEC. —. That it is hereby provided that all religious denominations shall enjoy a free and equal right to erect and maintain church and school buildings on any or all Indian reservations, and shall not be molested in their religious or philanthopic efforts to advance the Indians in moral, religious, and literary culture, but shall all equally and alike be perfectly free and encouraged in the prosecution of their civilizing and educational efforts.

SEC. —. That whenever any Indian belonging to any organized Indian tribe or nation having treaty relations with the United States shall desire to become a citizen of the United States, he may become such citizen by appearing in open court in the United States district court nearest to the reservation of his tribe or nation and making proof, to the satisfaction of said court, that he is sufficiently intelligent and prudent to control his own affairs and interests; that he has adopted the habits of civilized life, and has for at least five years been able to support himself and family; and by taking an oath to support the Constitution of the United States: Provided, That no Indian who avails himself of the provisions of this act shall be that account forfeit any interest which he may have in any improvement or other property in the reservation of the tribe or nation to which he may have belonged; nor shall such act in any manner impair his rights and interests in the lands, claims, or other property belonging or which may hereafter belong to his tribe or nation.

SEC. —. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask the Clerk to strike out the word "July" wherever it occurs and insert the word "October."

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does that mean?

Mr. WINDOM. That is as to the time when it is to go into effect.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it to take effect next October?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Next October instead of July.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will be a good time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made by unanimous consent. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky as modified.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask if those words will be amendable if they are inserted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be by striking out and adding, or by addition alone.

Mr. ALLISON. I wanted particularly to know whether they could be added to.

Mr. WINDOM. Does the Senator from Kentucky desire to make any remarks on his amendment?

Mr. STEVENSON. Not at this time.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. STEVENSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAYTON, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. ALCORN.] If he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea" on this motion.

Mr. HAMLIN, (when Mr. DAVIS's name was called.) I have been requested to state that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WEST] are absent in a committee of conference. If present the Senator from Louisiana would vote "yea," and the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay" on this motion.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DENNIS. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON.] If he were here he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay" on this motion.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 22, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Howe, Jones of Nevada, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Paddock, Sargent, Sherman, Spencer, Wadleigh, Windom, and Wright—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Booth, Caperton, Cockrell, Cooper, Goldthwaite, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, and Withers—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Clayton, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Gordon, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, West, and Whyte—26.

So the amendment of Mr. STEVENSON was ordered to lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on concurring in the amendment striking out section 3.

Mr. THURMAN. Before the question is put to strike the section out, I move to amend it by adding at the end:

This section shall take effect from and after the 1st day of January next.

It is obvious that this section, if enacted into a law, ought not to go into effect immediately.

Mr. LOGAN. Why not?

Mr. THURMAN. It would leave matters in a very bad state, because it will be impossible now so to arrange matters as to assign Army officers to these duties by the 1st of July.

Mr. LOGAN. That is the best way.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not think so.

Mr. LOGAN. Why?

Mr. THURMAN. My friend from Illinois, who is opposed to the whole measure and proposes to keep the present system, I dare say does not care how much confusion may be produced; but I think confusion ought to be avoided if possible. Therefore I have moved the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would not the 27th of the present month do just as well? [Laughter.] If we are to have it, let us have it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 18, noes 21.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, striking out section 3.

Mr. COOPER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. CLAYTON, (after having first voted in the affirmative.) I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. ALCORN,] and therefore I withdraw my vote. I voted inadvertently.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Howe, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Paddock, Sargent, Sherman, Spencer, Wadleigh, Windom, and Wright—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Booth, Caperton, Cockrell, Cooper, Goldthwaite, Harvey, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, and Withers—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Clayton, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Gordon, Ingalls, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, West, and Whyte—27.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will now report the first amendment to the bill made as in Committee of the Whole, all the amendments having been reserved.

Mr. WINDOM. Was not the third section the only amendment reserved?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They were all reserved, and a separate vote must be taken on each amendment if that is persisted in.

Mr. WINDOM. The others are merely formal amendments.

Mr. COOPER. I asked to have all the amendments reserved, but I will not insist upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee withdraws his request. The question is on concurring in all the amendments in gross.

The amendments were concurred in; there being on a division—ayes 21, noes 18.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. On page 62 of the bill I move to strike out the words "for incidental expenses of the Indian service in the following States and Territories, namely, in Arizona, $20,000," and insert:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service, including traveling expenses of agents, fuel, lights, stationery, office rent, purchase of office furniture, forage for agency animals, as follows, namely: In Arizona, $10,000.

The object of this amendment is to meet the difficulty felt by some Senators when the proposition was before the Senate yesterday. The Senate rejected the committee's amendments increasing the appropriation for incidental expenses in the Territories. I propose now to offer amendments reducing the amount which the House bill proposes for strictly incidental expenses, and to follow them with other amendments for each of the agencies in the various Territories provided for in the bill. The objection was urged yesterday that the language used was not sufficiently specific. I offer this amendment preparatory to offering the reductions for the purely incidental expenses which I will name after this is acted upon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator whether there is not anything in the bill as it now stands which can be devoted to incidental expenses?

Mr. WINDOM. I think there is nothing that can be devoted to incidental expenses in these Territories for these particular tribes. There is a general provision for educational purposes and for the general contingencies of the Bureau; but further than that I do not know of any.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Out of the general contingencies of the Bureau incidental expenses could be paid.

Mr. WINDOM. It would be difficult to pay $350,000 out of $30,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How is the present provision, as it now stands agreed to, for the general contingencies of the Bureau?

Mr. WINDOM. For the Bureau, $30,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the appropriation for the Arizona Indians?

Mr. WINDOM. The appropriation for the Arizona Indians is $20,000 as the bill now stands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Considering the hardness of the times, I shall vote for the $20,000 and against my friend's amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. I will not re-argue this question, as it was somewhat fully argued the other day. I will only say that it would produce a great deal of difficulty in the Territories to leave the bill as it stands. There are over twenty thousand Indians that have no provision made for them other than the general provision for educational purposes. They have for years received this small amount.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They have $20,000 in Arizona now, the Senator says?

Mr. WINDOM. I say there is no other provision except what is made under this head of "general incidental expenses." They received in Arizona last year $65,000 in all; and the sum now in the bill is entirely inadequate to meet the wants of the service in that Territory. I think there is no place in the bill where a reduction of $200,000 could be made that would create as much difficulty in the Indian service throughout the Territory as in this. That is the opinion of the Department, and I submit it to the Senate without further argument.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to appear to be severe on these Indians or on this service, because in some way it must be performed, either under the present arrangement or under some other. I find on page 55, for the Apaches of Arizona and New Mexico:

For this amount, to subsist and properly care for the Apache Indians in Arizona and New Mexico who have been or may be collected on reservations in New Mexico or Arizona, $450,000.

And then on page 62 "for general incidental expenses"—that is, for the means of paying out this $450,000 I suppose, and all the various things incidental that naturally arise—there are provided $20,000 more. It does appear to me, without any great knowledge of the subject I admit, that we ought to try the experiment of getting on with these two provisions; and without wasting the time of the Senate by going into the reasons at large, I state that for the consideration of the Senate as being what we might try for this year.

Mr. WINDOM. A single word in answer to the Senator from Vermont. The amount now sought to be provided is not for the Apaches of Arizona, but for the Colorado River agency, and I propose——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair reminds the Senator that he is out of order.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Chair to insist upon keeping me in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has spoken once on this amendment.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to ask the Senator from Minnesota——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio calls the attention of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. THURMAN. There was so much conversation in the Chamber that I did not catch what the Senator from Minnesota said on this subject except in a very imperfect manner; but if I understood him correctly, after having failed to raise the sum in the original bill to $65,000, he now proposes to reduce it to $10,000.

Mr. WINDOM. I do, but I propose to follow that amendment afterward by making a provision for the Indians in that Territory for whom no other provision is made. I propose to make this up in the incidental expenses, as the heading indicates.

Mr. THURMAN. That is what I understood the Senator to say, that he intends to follow it up by another provision; but, in order to vote understandingly upon this amendment, I should like to hear from him what his other provision is to be.

Mr. WINDOM. That is what I proposed to state, but under the rule the Chair stopped me and I could not do it.

Mr. THURMAN. Under what rule—the Senator's five-minute rule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator had spoken once, and the rule provides that but one speech shall be made on each amendment, extending to five minutes or less.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suppose there will be unanimous consent to hear the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator has the bill in charge and we want information. I hope he will be allowed to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to allowing the Senator from Minnesota to proceed? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINDOM. My proposition is, if the amendment now pending be adopted, to follow it by striking down nearly all the sums named on the sixty-second page, which are for strictly incidental expenses; and then I propose in the case of Arizona, for instance, to propose $55,000 for the expense of subsistence, employés, &c., in the Territory. It is the amount they have had for many years past, and I wish to test the sense of the Senate as to whether it is willing to give it to them this year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a substantial increase.

Mr. THURMAN. The proposition of the Senator from Minnesota really amounts to precisely the proposition which we voted down yesterday.

Mr. WINDOM. It is the same proposition in effect; but certain Senators objected to that because it did not specify for what agencies this money was to be appropriated.

Mr. THURMAN. I understand that the House of Representatives thinks $20,000 is necessary. The Senator thinks not only $20,000 necessary, but $45,000 more for Arizona, and so on with the rest. The proposition is now first to cut down the House bill and then to add to it. It adds to the bill precisely the same as the amendment of our committee, which was voted down. Under these circumstances I feel bound to vote against the Senator's amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. Mine is precisely the same as the committee's proposition, except that it specifies what it is for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a fair statement. Go ahead.

Mr. SARGENT. The short time allowed the Senator from Minnesota to explain perhaps did not enable him to inform the Senate of the full scope of his intention. So far as it relates to Arizona it seems to me that I should not be doing justice to the people of that Territory, near my own State and largely peopled by persons from my own State, if I did not say that there is danger of very great trouble in that Territory unless the present condition of things be maintained. The Indians of Arizona are a very wild, savage class of Indians. They are very murderous in their character. For a number of years the murders committed by them were daily, and sometimes as many as two or three a day. By the policy which has been pursued for four or five years past these Indians have been pacified and have been put upon reservations. We have to feed them there because the reservations are nearly barren. If this policy is discontinued and these Indians necessarily, for purposes of subsistence, are compelled again to roam over the Territory, there is nothing that will prevent the old collisions occurring again with the whites, the Territory being deluged with blood, and the old scenes re-enacted. I feel confident of that. I feel certain that by the time we meet here in the Senate again next winter we shall have the same old story coming up from Arizona that the Indians are wild, untamable, barbarous, and murderous.

I trust that the Senate will consider before it refuses to make the small necessary appropriation to keep the Indians of Arizona at peace with the Government. The policy which has been pursued has had that effect, and I would not feel myself blood-guiltless if I did not say that I believe the present policy must be continued, provided we would save the lives of our citizens there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Christiancy, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Howe, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Oglesby, Paddock, Sargent, Sherman, Spencer, Windom, and Wright—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Caperton, Cockrell, Cooper, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hitchcock, Johnston, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Stevenson, and Thurman—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Gordon, Hamlin, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, Whyte, and Withers—33.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Minnesota if he thinks we can get through this bill to-night. If not, we had better adjourn at once.

Mr. WINDOM. I think we can get through in fifteen minutes. I move to add after line 1533, on page 63, the following:

Arizona:

For support of Indians at the Colorado River agency and for pay of employés in the Territory of Arizona, $55,000.

The question being put, a division was called for, and the ayes were 14——

Mr. WINDOM. With the consent of the Senate I will withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. WINDOM. I will offer one other amendment. There is no provision whatever for incidental expenses in the central superintendency, where there are some 20,000 Indians and seven agencies. I move to insert after the word "dollars," in line 1524:

Central superintendency, $4,000.

Making that amount for incidental expenditures.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Let us take that, it is so small.

Mr. WINDOM. There is nothing whatever for incidental expenditures there appropriated in the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much do you propose?

Mr. WINDOM. I propose $4,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is that one of the printed amendments reported from the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. WINDOM. It is not. It is an amendment I have offered since from the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. The reason why I voted against the amendment acted on just now was that the Senate have acted already upon every amendment reported from the committee that has been printed. I do not think we ought, at this period of the session, to take up new amendments from the committee. It seems to me we had better take the bill as it is, and if there is an accidental omission, perhaps it can be supplied.

Mr. WINDOM. I cannot say that this is an accidental omission; but it is a sum that ought to be appropriated.

Mr. SHERMAN. In that case let it go in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that in Committee of the Whole the Senate non-concurred in the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations on page 62, leaving the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was done in a full Senate by a yea-and-nay vote, and it is scarcely worth while to reconsider the votes that we have had.

Mr. WINDOM. This amendment was not voted upon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is a fresh one.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senator from Minnesota that, if this is an oversight and we have not already voted upon it, I have no objection to letting it go in.

Mr. WINDOM. We have not considered it before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not propose to offer any other amendment, but, as I have withdrawn the amendments with reference to incidental expenditures, I desire to leave those items as the House left them. We have changed the $20,000 for Arizona to $10,000. I do not think anybody wants to do that.

Several SENATORS. Put it back.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment in regard to Arizona, in line 1514, will be regarded as reconsidered, and the item will remain as it is in the House bill. ["Agreed."]

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

Mr. SARGENT. I wish to have the naval appropriation bill taken up to be left as the unfinished business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that ready?

Mr. SARGENT. It is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I make no objection, though I rose to move another bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3375) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at nine o'clock and forty-one minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 21, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. LYNCH. Will the gentleman yield to me to introduce a couple of bills for reference only?

Mr. RANDALL. I will yield for that purpose.

WILLIAM HOLMES.

Mr. LYNCH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3759) for the relief of William Holmes, of Adams County, Mississippi; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MATILDA SHIELDS.

Mr. LYNCH also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3760) for the relief of Matilda Shields; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JUDSON S. POST.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Claims, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, the bill (S. No. 770) for the relief of Judson S. Post, of Missouri, late disbursing officer of the Navy.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to Judson S. Post, late disbursing officer of the United States Navy, the sum of $202.59, being the amount of interest paid by him on $450.24, claimed to have been due from him to the United States, and paid by him upon the final settlement of his account as a disbursing officer of the United States Navy, the said sum of $450.24 having been refunded to him by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORTS FROM PENSION COMMITTEE.

Mr. BAGBY. As I shall be obliged soon to leave the city on service of a committee of this House, I ask unanimous consent to make several reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly.

SUSAN A. HEAZLIT.

Mr. BAGBY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2970) granting a pension to Susan A. Heazlit, aunt of George W. Heazlit, a deceased soldier, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. BAGBY also, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the following; which were laid upon the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 2769) granting a pension to William Reynolds, late a member of Company H, Forty-first Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia;

A bill (H. R. No. 2805) restoring the name of Martha L. Reams, widow of William P. Reams, deceased, to the pension-rolls; and

The petition of Bridget Collins, widow of John Collins, late a private Company I, United States Infantry, for a pension.

FAVORABLE REPORTS.

Mr. BAGBY also reported back from the same committee, with a recommendation that the same do pass, the following bills; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 309) granting a pension to Theodore Pillard;

A bill (H. R. No. 3087) granting a pension to Mary Rogers, mother of John Rogers, deceased, Company D, Fourth Tennessee Infantry Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1714) restoring the name of Thomas W. Brown, late private Company C, Thirty-fourth Illinois Volunteers, to the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. No. 3496) granting a pension to James Kile, late private Company I, Seventeenth Illinois Volunteers; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3560) granting a pension to Mrs. Elmira Forbes, widow of D. Brazilla Forbes, late a private in Company F, Seventy-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

Mr. BAGBY also, from the same committee, reported the following bills; which were read a first and second time, with the accompanying reports ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar:

A bill (H. R. No. 3761) granting a pension to Charles W. Parker, private Company E, Thirty-third Massachusetts Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 3762) as a substitute for House bill No. 3598, granting a pension to Edward Wilson, private Company G, Third North Carolina Mounted Infantry Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 3763) as a substitute for House bill No. 2444 granting a pension to Martha J. Robinson, widow of James H. Robinson; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3764) granting a pension to Norman Comstock, late captain Company E, One hundred and twenty-third Illinois Volunteers.

INFRINGEMENT OF PATENTS.

Mr. LYNDE. I rise to a privileged question, and call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House ordered to be engrossed and read a third time the bill (H. R. No. 3370) to amend the statutes in relation to damages for infringement of patents, and for other purposes. By order of the House the consideration of that motion was postponed until this morning immediately after the reading of the Journal. I now call up that motion.

Mr. EAMES. I rise to debate the motion.

Mr. LYNDE. I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. SAMPSON. I renew the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not recognized the gentleman for that purpose. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] as entitled to the floor to call up the business he has indicated.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to inquire whether the motion to reconsider has been withdrawn, because there are interests involved which I wish to preserve?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin has withdrawn the motion to reconsider.

Mr. CONGER. Then I renew it. I desire to do so that we may save some rights in regard to this matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has moved to suspend the rules that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the sundry civil appropriation bill. I submit that that has priority over any motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not understood that the gentleman from Pennsylvania made that motion.

Mr. RANDALL. O, yes, sir; I made the motion, and then merely yielded for these requests for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit the matter to the House for consideration. The gentleman from Wisconsin has made a privileged motion, which comes up this morning by unanimous consent given yesterday. It is simply a question of reconsidering a vote that was then taken. On motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] the further consideration of the motion to reconsider was postponed until to-day immediately after the reading of the Journal. Unanimous consent was given to that arrangement.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to having this matter disposed of.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that the previous question will be called and the vote taken at once.

Mr. LYNDE. The previous question is already ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question is already ordered; and the reading of the engrossed bill is the first business in order.

Mr. OLIVER. The motion to reconsider is renewed; I renew that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin is on the floor in charge of this bill; the Chair cannot take him off the floor.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a point of order. I object to withdrawing the motion to reconsider.

Mr. EAMES. I objected at the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair heard no objection in time.

Mr. EAMES. I made objection promptly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not in time; the Chair begs the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think we should not go quite so fast upon this matter. The motion to reconsider is a privileged question. It was withdrawn, which of course can be done, but it has been renewed; and the motion when renewed to-day is a question of privilege, as this is within the time allowed by the rules for motions to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question was seconded on this bill, and the gentleman from Wisconsin is on the floor. The Chair cannot take him from the floor. He has been recognized to carry through his measure.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. He could not be taken from the floor if he had insisted on speaking upon the motion to reconsider or upon having that motion put to the House; but when he withdrew it, it became the privilege of any other member of the House to renew the motion.

Mr. LYNDE. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore There are various precedents this session for the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. By this proceeding we are destroying the right of reconsideration altogether.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has decided the point. The gentleman from Wisconsin has been recognized as in charge of this bill.

Mr. OLIVER. I rise to a question of order. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. EAMES] objected to the withdrawal of the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not hear that until it was too late.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman made the objection at the time. I distinctly understood him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the House is now acting under an order made by unanimous consent, and the Chair will enforce the rule in that regard.

Mr. EAMES. I think the record does not show any unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first business in order is the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. OLIVER. I rise to a point of order. I desire respectfully to inquire whether the gentleman from Rhode Island had not a right to object to the withdrawal of this motion? I understood him distinctly as objecting at the time of the withdrawal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already said that the objection came too late.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman from Rhode Island has himself stated to the Chair that he made the objection in time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is unnecessary for the Chair to discuss the question further.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I would like to say one word further on the question of order. I wish to refer to what has been the universal practice of this House, both in the House and in Committee of the Whole, and it is a practice for which precedents can be found within the last ten days. I refer particularly to the occasion when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] stated that he had made a point of order in time, which however did not come to the attention of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] who was in the chair. That gentleman then laid down this rule, (and he said it was a ruling which had never been departed from,) that when a gentleman states upon his honor as a Representative that he made a point in time and refers to the members around him to sustain him, the occupant of the chair always regards the point as being made in time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that this matter had progressed some time before the statement of the gentleman from Rhode Island; and the Chair does not propose to withdraw his ruling.

Mr. EAMES. That is not my recollection, and I wish to state that very distinctly.

Mr. FORT. I wish to say, in confirmation of what the gentleman from Rhode Island states, that he did object to the withdrawal of the motion to reconsider, but I think it likely that it was in such a low tone the Chair did not hear it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is a single objection sufficient? The gentleman from Wisconsin had the floor and had the right to withdraw his motion, according to the understanding yesterday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Rhode Island, according to the record, rose for the purpose of debating the motion to reconsider, and not to object to its withdrawal. That is what the reporters report. The Chair must be corrected only by the record.

Mr. EAMES. I ask to be treated as other members are, and no more. Just as soon as the motion to reconsider was withdrawn I objected to its withdrawal and rose to debate it, and that is what I said. If the reporters took my language correctly, that is precisely what I said.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman state that he rose to object to the withdrawal of the motion to reconsider?

Mr. EAMES. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will take the gentleman's word. The Chair only heard that the gentleman rose for the purpose of debate, and the reporters bear the Chair out in that statement.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I must object to that procedure. The gentleman from Wisconsin had the right to withdraw that motion. The point I raise is that my colleague from Iowa [Mr. SAMPSON] renewed it on the spot, and he had the right to do it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Wisconsin had the floor. He made a motion to recommit. He had the right to withdraw it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. No; he made the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was engrossed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; he made the motion to reconsider.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. And he had the right to withdraw it.

Mr. HOLMAN. And he did withdraw it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But that is a question of privilege which any other member of the House has the right to renew, and we are here attempting to ride down the right of a member to reconsider.

Mr. HOLMAN. You could not do that with the previous question pending. That motion was entered by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Unanimous consent! No, sir; you are mistaken. It was the postponement that was agreed to by unanimous consent. The motion to reconsider is a personal right, and that is what we are riding down.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, what is the question before the House?

Mr. HURLBUT. I rise to a point of order; for those who are sitting back on the outer row cannot hear a word that is going on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will rule on the point of order. The motion to reconsider has this quality: that any member can make it, and take any member off the floor to make it. That is understood to be the rule. If the gentleman from Rhode Island states that he rose for the purpose of objecting and renewing the motion to reconsider, the Chair will entertain it.

Mr. EAMES. I did not state that. I have not said that. What I did state was that immediately on the gentleman from Wisconsin withdrawing the motion to reconsider I objected, and rose to debate the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As no member rose to reconsider——

Mr. SAMPSON. I remember that when the gentleman from Wisconsin stated he withdrew the motion to reconsider I rose and said that I renewed it, when the Speaker ruled that I had not the floor for the purpose of making that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman say he made the motion at that time?

Mr. SAMPSON. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the rules indicate that a member may be taken off the floor for that purpose, the Chair rules on the point of order that the motion to reconsider is still pending. That is the final decision.

Mr. LYNDE. I move the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. SAMPSON. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin has lost the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the superior motion.

Mr. SAMPSON. I claim the floor on the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has not the floor to claim it. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to take up the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair) on the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not my intention to detain the House with any general remarks on this bill, but in preference to give, under the five-minute rule as opportunity offers, such explanation in detail as may be required from time to time by members of the House who may seek information as to its provisions.

Mr. STENGER. I should have greatly preferred to speak directly on the bill reported by the Select Committee to Investigate the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company. But I entertain the fear that that bill may not be reached in its regular order. I am not without hope, however, that the presentation of the affairs of this company may hasten the action of the House upon the bill; and it is for that reason that I seize this opportunity to say what I have to say with reference to this defunct corporation.

Mr. Chairman, the close of the war threw 4,000,000 colored people upon the care of the nation. They were a helpless people. They had been born and reared under a system which made it the duty of their masters to provide for their bodily wants. In their condition of servitude they found that on each recurring day they were supplied with the necessaries of life without exercising any forethought of their own. They therefore took no thought of the morrow, caring not for what they should eat or what they should drink, or wherewithal they should be clothed, and feeling sure that their earthly master or their heavenly Father would know that they needed all these things. Thus, possessed of the idea that others must care for them, and not they for themselves, they could not readily realize the necessity for exertion which came with their emancipation.

Slavery had made them indolent. Their number, as a rule, was greatly in excess of that required to perform the labor of the plantations. Theirs was a lazy, thriftless life. They took no heed of the flight of time and had no appreciation of its value. Whether the work given them to do was done to-day or to-morrow was a matter of complete indifference to them. It is not surprising, therefore, that when thrown upon their own resources they lacked the disposition and energy to begin quickly the acquirement of industrious habits.

Slavery had kept them in ignorance. Few of them had acquired any knowledge of literature, science, philosophy, history, or finance, and the vast majority of them could neither read nor write. Above the clangor of trumpets, the clash of bayonets, the rattle of musketry, and the roar of cannon they had heard a "still small voice" telling them of their coming deliverance, and they cherished an abiding faith that "the year of jubilee" would come; but when it did come they were incapable of appreciating the grand and beneficent results that were to flow from it or of warding off and protecting themselves from the dangers arising from the machinations of evil-disposed and avaricious men. They could not realize the transcendant importance of their newly-acquired rights; they could not understand the gravity of their newly-imposed responsibilities. Coming from the gross darkness of bondage into the dazzling light of liberty so suddenly, they could not see the way in which they were called to walk. They had never been accustomed to consider, much less to reason upon, political or financial matters, and were therefore of necessity compelled to lean upon others for information and direction. Their ignorance thus exposed them to the snares that might be set for them by the unscrupulous.

The only persons who had the opportunity to keep them from being caught in such snares were those who affiliated with and led the party in power; for in them, and them only, did these poor, helpless, and ignorant negroes repose their trust. The idea had been ingeniously and persistently instilled into the minds of the freedmen that they owed their freedom entirely to the then dominant party, and that it would not only be an act of base ingratitude, but one of self-destruction, on their part to repudiate the friendly efforts of the men of that organization who were devoting wearisome days and sleepless nights to the work of advancing their political, social, and financial welfare. It was but natural, then, that they should go for guidance to those who were credited with having achieved their liberation from slavery; and to them they did go. We shall see what kind of treatment they have received at their hands.

Just here it becomes a duty and a necessity to draw a line between two classes of men with whom the freedmen were brought into contact, both composed of their so-called natural protectors. The one was animated by a true philanthropy which sought earnestly, honestly, and faithfully to protect the interests and promote the welfare of the freedmen. The efforts of such men to elevate a race just released from bondage appealed to the noblest sentiments of the human heart and elicited the warmest sympathy from and commanded the highest admiration of all good citizens throughout the Union. They were enthusiastically devoted to the cause of the freedmen, because they loved liberty for its own sake. They were irreconcilably hostile to all distinctions of caste, and hence had never let slip an opportunity to strike a blow at slavery as it existed in America. Their motives have long been misjudged because of the bitterness which attended and followed the "irrepressible conflict." The passions excited by the war were too violent to admit immediately upon its close of justice being done to many who waged an unceasing and unrelenting crusade against the peculiar institution of the South. But, sir, I am gratified to be able to say in my place upon this floor, in this year which closes the first century of our nation's existence, that, from my association with many Representatives of the southern people in this body, I am satisfied that they not only rejoice over the fact that slavery is dead and buried beyond the hope of resurrection, but that they are ready and willing to do justice to the memories of the men who, in aiming their deadly blows at its life, were animated by a sincere regard for the welfare of the bondmen. They can appreciate the marvelous beauty of the picture drawn by the poet wherein he represents Abou Ben Adhem awakening from "a deep dream of peace" and seeing, "within the moonlight in his room," "an angel writing in a book of gold" "the names of those who love the Lord:"

> "And is mine one?" said Abou. "Nay, not so,"
> Replied the angel. Abou spoke more low,
> But cheerily still; and said, "I pray thee, then,
> Write me as one who loves his fellow-men."
> The angel wrote, and vanished. The next night
> It came again, with a great wakening light,
> And showed the names whom love of God had blessed,
> And, lo! Ben Adhem's name led all the rest!

Some there were, Mr. Chairman, in that fierce struggle between brethren, amid whose agonizing throes was born the liberty of the slave, who loom up grandly now, in the light of subsequent events, as men who hated slavery simply because it contravened their sense of justice and right between man and man, and who sought its destruction for no other reason than that they "loved their fellow-men" who were held in bondage. And toward that class, the men of the South, as far as I can ascertain, entertain no animosity to-day.

But there is another class, sir, which has been governed by a mock philanthropy. Their conduct has been marked by the vilest hypocrisy. They have made broad their phylacteries, prayed upon the street-corners, and thanked their God that they are not as other men are. They have "stolen the livery of the court of heaven to serve the devil in." They have gone to the freedmen with words of promise and hope and encouragement upon their lips, but with consuming greed and avarice in their hearts. They have borne to these helpless and ignorant people proffers of help, while their minds were busily engaged in schemes to rob them. They have solicited their confidence as friends, while they have been devising ways and means to plunder them of their hard earnings. They have assumed the garb of teachers, while their only mission has been to learn how to steal from them. They have gone with the teachings of Christ in their mouths, while their chief ambition has been to be of the class of political carpet-baggers, abhorred of all decent men, or of the class of money-changers whom Christ drove mercilessly from the temple. Toward this class, sir, the good people of the South, and the good people of the North as well, entertain an uncompromising and undying hatred. They can extend no charity toward such human vultures, whose only purpose was to cover and devour.

I regret to say that into the clutches of this latter class did the uneducated, helpless, but confiding freedmen fall. I say confiding, because there is no race of men on earth which gives itself up with such perfect confidence to the leadership of those in whom it trusts. There is no race that loves with a more ardent affection. The man who has been a slaveholder knows and appreciates well the intensity of the love of his faithful servant for the children committed to his care. We of the North, Mr. Chairman, have seen and, I trust, appreciated the love of the colored people for our own children. And these designing men who sought their own enrichment through the impoverishment of the colored man were not slow to estimate the advantage of securing his childlike confidence.

Of the first class which I have described was Charles Sumner. I know, sir, that the lamp of his life ceased to burn at a time when the contumely of the party whose standard he had so often helped to bear to victory was his portion; but that was owing to the fact that he would not permit a change to come over the spirit of his dream of a pure republican government; because he would not lend himself to the prosecution of a scheme of personal aggrandizement on which the Administration had set its heart; because he would not "crook the pregnant hinges of the knee that thrift might follow fawning." I know too that, owing to misrepresentation, the same spirit of vindictiveness that ousted him from the high position which he filled with so much grace and honor and dignity in the Senate has also alienated for a time from him the affections of the colored people whom he had served so well, but history will do him justice, and the colored people of coming generations will rise up and call him blessed. And I do not doubt, sir, that the Southerner of hottest blood, who wrongfully approved the act of Preston Brooks when he struck him down in his senatorial chair, cannot help being impressed by the grandeur and majesty of the man who would not yield his convictions of right at the dictation of the Executive, although he knew that his refusal so to do would be followed by the extremest displeasure of that officer and ostracism from the councils of his party.

Out of a spirit of true philanthropy Mr. Sumner, on the 17th day of February, 1865, reported the bill by which the Freedman's Bank was called into being, and on the 3d day of March following it became a law. He did not frame the bill and is, therefore, not responsible for its defects or omissions. Large numbers of colored men had served in the Union Army, many of them as gallant soldiers, and had saved portions of their pay and bounties. They were entirely unfitted to make safe and remunerative investments of their money. Here was a proposition to render them necessary assistance, by providing a depository where their funds could be received and invested for their benefit "in the stocks, bonds, Treasury notes, or other securities of the United States." It was a lofty and a laudable purpose. It was calculated to encourage the freedmen to the exercise of industry so that he might make money, and to the practice of frugality so that he might husband his resources, and thus provide for the wants of himself and family against the coming of old age, sickness, and death. And with this purpose Mr. Sumner could not but feel the heartiest sympathy. In the short debate in the Senate on the bill, he characterized it "as a simple charity." He ingrafted upon it an amendment requiring the officers of the bank to give security. But it never occurred to him that it was necessary to inspect, line by line, a bill that had been placed in his hands by men known as the professed zealous friends of the freedmen. He never dreamed that there might be a predetermination on the part of these men to abuse the great trust then about to be placed in their hands. Had such a thought occurred to him, I do not doubt that additional restrictions would have been imposed and some very important provisions added.

But, sir, devilish cunning and ingenuity played their part, and played it well, in framing this act of incorporation. There were men who saw in this project a golden opportunity to make money for themselves. The act is not only remarkable on account of some provisions which it contains, but on account of certain other very necessary provisions which were left out; and from the results which followed its passage, toward the accomplishment of which some of the active originators and promoters of the enterprise contributed so largely, it is not too uncharitable to believe that they framed it with a view to the attainment of their own selfish purposes.

Take some illustrations. In the charter fifty gentlemen, most of them men of high character for integrity and business capacity, were named as corporators and first trustees of the corporation. This was intended to commend it to the support of the colored men, the names of these eminent business men apparently affording a perfect guarantee for a safe, prudent, and lucrative management of the institution. Among these names was that of William Cullen Bryant, whose journal, published in New York, recently commenting on the report of the committee investigating the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, said:

> Unfortunately, it is an unquestionable fact that the money of the depositors is gone, while it is as true that, with proper management, it would have been saved for them. As to its misappropriation, we believe that the committee is unanimous. Assuming the account to be exact, it is to be regretted that there is not some new and unique term to describe this meanest of swindles, and some special and exquisite punishment for the rascals who are guilty of it.

But the extraordinary provision was inserted that nine of the fifty trustees "shall form a quorum for the transaction of business at any regular or adjourned meeting of the board of trustees," and the affirmative vote of seven members was declared sufficient to make "any order for, or authorizing the investment of, any moneys, or the sale or transfer of any stock or securities, belonging to the corporation, or the appointment of any officer receiving any salary therefrom." This was a crafty device, which looked to the formation of an unscrupulous ring that could fatten upon the small earnings of the confiding negroes.

Again, this charter, as originally framed, contemplated the widest possible stretch of territory for the operations of the company. It did not mean to be hemmed in by any sort of inconvenient limitations. Its missionaries were to be commissioned to go into all the States of the Union, and, while proclaiming themselves as the deliverers of the bondmen and teaching the latter "to toil and to save," to gather in their little savings, so that the ring might have immense sums upon which to speculate and grow rich. But a timely objection made by several Senators—one a distinguished gentleman from my own State, [Mr. Buckalew,]—prevented such a monstrosity from becoming a law, and compelled these missionaries, if they should see fit to cover such a wide range of territory, to do it in violation of law. The history of this legislation is interesting, not only as showing the extent of the powers conferred upon the corporation, as understood by the Senate and House, but also as showing a juggle or trick by which the charter was illegally procured and the freedmen deprived of the services and protection of one of their warmest and stanchest friends. It shows that the act was conceived in fraud and brought forth in iniquity.

The bill as reported to the Senate provided that fifty gentlemen, whose names were given, "and their successors, are constituted a body-corporate, by the name of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and by that name may sue and be sued in any court of the United States." When the bill was under consideration in the Senate, on the 2d of March, 1865, the following remarks were made. I quote from the Congressional Globe, volume 55, page 1311:

Mr. BROWN. I move to dispense with the reading. Let the Senator state whether it is an ordinary savings-bank charter.

Mr. SUMNER. It is an ordinary savings-bank charter, and its character is indicated in its title, to incorporate the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company.

Mr. POWELL. No extraordinary privileges?

Mr. SUMNER. No extraordinary privileges, and its object is a simple charity.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I have read the bill; it is in proper form, and the only question is whether we ought to establish such an institution outside of the District of Columbia.

* * * * * * *

Mr. POWELL. I find by the reading of that bill that it is a roving kind of commission for these persons to establish a savings-bank in any part of the United States. I think the bill is wholly unconstitutional. I do not believe Congress has any right to establish a savings-bank outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well, let it be limited to the District. Let the amendment be made by inserting after the words "body-corporate," in the nineteenth line of the first section, the words, "in the District of Columbia." That is precisely the amendment which was made last night in the bill founding the asylum.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

* * * * * * *

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Powell, its title was amended by the addition of the words "in the District of Columbia."

On the following day the bill was called up in the House, and, strange to say, did not contain the amendments suggested by Mr. Sumner and Mr. Powell, and incorporated in it by the Senate, as is shown by the following remarks made in the House. I read from the Congressional Globe, volume 55, page 1403:

Mr. GANSON. I would ask where this bank or association is to be located?

Mr. ELIOT. In Washington City.

Mr. GANSON. It is not so stated in the bill.

Mr. ELIOT. That is an error. Then I ask unanimous consent to insert after the words "body-corporate" the words "in Washington City, District of Columbia."

No objection was made, and the amendment was adopted.

Mr. GANSON. I think there should be among the corporators the name of some person in this District.

Mr. ELIOT. I move to amend by inserting the name of Salmon P. Chase among the trustees.

No objection was made, and the amendment was accordingly agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time; and was read the third time, and passed.

The bill thus amended was never sent back to the Senate for concurrence in the amendments made by the House, but the Congressional Globe, volume 55, page 1360, contains this statement:

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill of the Senate (S. No. 443) to incorporate the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company.

It said nothing about the amendments.

It will be thus seen that there was somebody about who was engineering the bill, and who dared to fix it according to his own wishes by unceremoniously and summarily dropping the words added to the title by the Senate, and entirely disregarding the wishes of the House as to Mr. Chase. And the law is published in the statute-books without the words "in the District of Columbia" in the title and without naming Mr. Chase as one of the trustees. Thus a mammoth corporation was brought into being through trickery and fraud, with fifty corporators and trustees named, ostensibly to do business in the city of Washington, and not a single one of its corporators residing within the District limits. As Mr. J. W. Alvord and General O. O. Howard were the "originators" of the bank, it might be well for them to explain the process by which these unsatisfactory amendments were lopped off, and why the name of Mr. Chase was not allowed to appear among the trustees of an institution in whose welfare he could certainly have been expected to take the liveliest interest and to whose success he could have contributed so largely.

But in addition to all this there was an entire omission to provide in the bill for the punishment of faithless officials. It visited no pains or penalties upon those who should be guilty of fraud, embezzlement, or any sort of malfeasance in office, and when defalcations were disclosed and the faithlessness of officials was brought to light there was no statute adequate to their punishment. In other words, the law was framed to permit the practice of all kinds of roguery upon the colored people and to permit the scoundrels who practiced it to go free. It is true that in 1874, when the bank was tottering to its fall, legislation looking to the punishment of the criminals was enacted, but, even under that, only two or three of the many rascals who ought to be now looking out from behind the cross-bars of penitentiary doors have been convicted.

Such was the mode of procurement and such was the composition of the charter that was soon heralded to the world as calculated to shower innumerable and inestimable blessings upon the freedmen. A movement was immediately set on foot to bring the institution to the attention of all the colored people of the South. The principal office, without any shadow of warrant for it in the charter, was established in New York and remained there until 1867, when it was removed to Washington. Agents were sent down among these credulous people to excite their interest and solicit their small sums of money for deposit. The Freedmen's Bureau, authorized on the same day that the bank was chartered, had its agents also in the South, who "worked up" the interests of the bank as they visited the freedmen. Branch banks to the number of thirty-four were established at various places in the South, ostensibly for the convenience of the freedmen in making their deposits, but in reality for the convenience of the managers in collecting the money for transmission to the Washington office. The establishment of these branches was a signal violation of the charter. There can be no warrant for them in the act of incorporation except by the most preposterous construction, and in the course of our examination no one has been found bold enough to attempt to find it. These trusting negroes were made to believe that the Government of the United States would be responsible for the payment of their deposits; that, if through any mismanagement, or accident, or fraud, the bank should fail, the depositors could fall back upon the Government and collect every dollar of their money with the interest accrued thereon. On this point I quote the testimony of Anson M. Sperry, who has been in the continuous service of the bank since its organization in various capacities, among others as its inspector from 1871 to 1874, a most intelligent and, in my judgment, reliable witness:

Question. Do you known whether at Vicksburgh, or any other branch, the inducement was held out to depositors to deposit in that bank because it was a Government institution?

Answer. I think it was.

Q. That inducement was made to induce persons to deposit; that it was a Government institution and that the Government was bound to the depositors?

A. Yes; I cannot say specially at Vicksburgh, though I think that that foolish policy was adopted there.

Q. Did they not represent that the deposits made by individuals would be guaranteed by the Government of the United States?

A. I think they did, but I will qualify my answer by saying that I am not certain as to Vicksburgh; though I think so. But of this I am certain, that you will find on many of the pass-books of the New York branch these words, in English, French, and German: "The Government of the United States has made this bank perfectly safe."

Q. You say that that will be found on many of the pass-books?

A. Yes. I wanted to raise this question before the committee because it is important, and it relates to the history of the institution. I do not think our more judicious cashiers ever adopted that phrase.

True, the "more judicious cashiers" never did adopt that phrase, but a little pamphlet was prepared containing the charter and by-laws of the bank and distributed among the freedmen, which contained this statement:

The whole institution is under the charter of Congress, and received the commendation and countenance of the President, Abraham Lincoln. One of the last official acts of his valued life was the signing of the bill which gave legal existence to the bank.

It needed only a reference to the martyr-President who had signed the act of emancipation to inspire the utmost confidence. Everything that the wits of these people, sharpened by the whettings of their infernal avarice, could suggest was resorted to for the purpose of drawing money from the freedmen's pockets. The "Christian soldier," General Howard, was then loud in his professions of love for the negroes, and his certificate was sent out as follows:

I consider the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company to be greatly needed by the colored people and have welcomed it as an auxiliary to the Freedman's Bureau.

O. O. HOWARD,
Major-General.

The colored people were entreated to practice industry and frugality. It was a matter of importance to put these appeals in a form that would attract and carry conviction to their uneducated minds, and hence this rhyme, the poetry of which is no better than the morality of its authors:

'Tis little by little the bee fills her cell;
And little by little a man sinks a well;
'Tis little by little a bird builds her nest;
By littles a forest in verdure is drest;
'Tis little by little great volumes are made;
By littles a mountain or levels are made;
'Tis little by little an ocean is filled;
And little by little a city we build;
'Tis little by little an ant gets her store;
Every little we add to a little makes more;
Step by step we walk miles, and we sew stitch by stitch;
Word by word we read books, cent by cent we grow rich.

It turns out that these lessons of industry and frugality were taught to the negroes so that the managers of the bank at Washington might live in laziness and luxury on the proceeds of their labor, and "grow rich" upon the "cent by cent" saved by the self-denial of the freedmen.

By these and other means, which I have not time to enumerate, the confidence of the freedmen was secured to such an extent that, as shown by the books of the bank, in the nine years of its existence its deposits amounted to $56,000,000. The vast bulk of this money was sent to the principal office at Washington. The whole South was drained of its money, and it went into the custody of the men in charge of the office here. True, a pretended power was given to and exercised by some of the branches to loan out money for the alleged purpose of accommodating the freedmen, but it is notorious that those branches were in charge of men who either loaned the money to their relatives or favorites or stole it themselves, so that the freedmen derived no benefit from them. In this connection I quote from a speech made on this floor March 2, 1875, by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. RAINEY,] who, I take pleasure in saying, has manifested a marked interest in this investigation affecting the rights of the people of his own race. He said:

It must not be lost sight of that at the time these sums were forwarded to the principal bank at Washington the depositors in the Southern States invariably believed that the moneys so deposited by them were subject to their order, as per rules and regulations governing the branch bank, and if sent to the parent bank it was for the purpose of being guarded with greater security or invested to better advantage. But, alas! they were deceived.

The suffering to which the poor creditors have been subjected is heart-rending in the extreme. Both their aged and their young have been deprived of the ordinary necessaries of life; their sick could not be cared for, nor their dead decently interred by them nor by benevolent societies, because all their gathered funds had been swallowed up in this gulf of destruction.

Parents and guardians could not send their children or wards to school, because they had not the means to buy them comfortable clothing. Truly the distress has been alarming, starvation and destitution being threatened on every hand and in many instances their little homesteads sold from over their heads.

It needs no additional words of mine to depict the distress which has come upon these unfortunate and betrayed people.

The last report of the commissioners of the bank shows that its total liabilities on the 31st day of December, 1875, were $3,004,875.62, of which the amount due to colored depositors was $2,992,033.55. Preferred claims, amounting to $48,180.71, have been paid, and on the balance, to wit, $2,956,694.91, a dividend of 20 per cent. has been declared. When this dividend shall have been paid, there will remain due to the creditors $2,365,355.93, to be paid out of the assets remaining after the dividend was declared. I cannot see, sir, how it is possible for the remaining assets to be made to realize enough to bring the final losses of the freedmen below $1,500,000, and it is more likely, in my judgment, that they will be compelled to suffer to the extent of $2,000,000.

In these days when stock and gold gamblers make hundreds of thousands of dollars in a single venture, in a single day, this sum may seem small to the millionaires of Wall street, but when it is remembered that its represents the hard earnings and small savings of seventy thousand poor colored people, just released from slavery and looked upon as "the wards of the nation," this sum of a million and a half or two millions, outweighs in importance the wealth of the Rothschilds.

Now, Mr. Chairman, how has this money been lost and where does the terrible responsibility for its loss rest? These questions will necessarily be answered together as the history of these losses is unfolded.

A portion of the money was embezzled or stolen in the branch banks. These defalcations discovered at the following branches are shown to be as follows:

Charleston, South Carolina	$1,500
Atlanta, Georgia	8,000
Beaufort, South Carolina	10,000
Mobile, Alabama	5,081
New Berne, North Carolina, from $2,250 to	2,750
Wilmington, North Carolina	2,416
Natchez, Mississippi	1,125
Lynchburgh, Virginia	900
Jacksonville, Florida	1,000
Lexington, Kentucky	5,000

This statement discloses the actual defalcations of the persons in charge of ten of the branches. But it does not embrace the losses incurred in the branches by loans upon insufficient securities. Mr. Sperry says "the latest report from the commissioners' agent, Mr. Lockwood, is that at Jacksonville the company will probably lose $100,000 out of the $150,000 or $160,000 that was put out there." At Beaufort "the amount of the loans, I think, was between $135,000 and $145,000, of which $100,000 may safely be set down as lost." At Vicksburgh loans were made to the amount of $11,000, which the witness regards as a clear loss to the bank. At Wilmington, North Carolina, overdrafts were allowed to the extent of $28,000, which have not been paid. In the Washington branch there is a discrepancy of $40,000 which is utterly incapable of explanation. Many of the bonds taken from the agents in charge of these branches were informal, so that they could not be enforced, or, if regular in form, were utterly worthless on account of the irresponsibility of the sureties.

The real responsibility, however, for all these defalcations and losses on loans rests upon the shoulders of those who had charge of the principal office in Washington, who established these branches without authority of law and in open violation of the charter.

But these losses, important as they seem, are utterly insignificant compared with those sustained by reason of the irregularities and frauds practiced in the principal office at Washington. Here it was that the men intent on plunder found and tilled the richest field. I venture the assertion that the history of all the banks in America does not disclose a record of such shameless disregard of law and wanton violation of rights as does the history of the principal office of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company. Here, in the American Congress, I arraign at the bar of public opinion the men who have heartlessly speculated upon, misused, squandered, and sunk the hard earnings of a helpless race of people, whom they were hypocritically pretending to befriend. And I cannot but think it strange that successive Congresses, containing large majorities of those who claimed to be the only true friends of the colored people, should not have taken sufficient interest in their welfare, and watched the operations of those in charge of this company, so as to have prevented this terrible abuse of a sacred trust, and the consequent shameful plunder of the freedmen. The charter provided "that the books of the corporation shall at all times, during the hours of business, be open for inspection and examination to such persons as Congress shall designate or appoint," but no such persons were appointed. This failure on the part of these pretended guardians to exercise the necessary vigilance for the thorough protection of these people is in the highest degree reprehensible. But when it is taken into account that the legislation enacted by Congress helped to facilitate the swindling operations of the ring, words are powerless to express the enormity of their conduct.

From the time the principal office was opened in Washington down to the day when the bank closed its doors its affairs were under the almost exclusive management of the finance committee and the actuary, the latter officer corresponding to a cashier in other banks. The board of trustees seems to have virtually delegated or surrendered their powers to the finance committee, and the latter conducted the operations of the bank to suit their own convenience, pleasure, and profit.

During the period of the grossest maladministration of the affairs of the bank this committee consisted of Henry D. Cooke, William S. Huntington, Lewis Clephane, J. M. Brodhead, and Le Roy Tuttle. J. W. Alvord, as president of the bank, was president ex officio of the committee and presided over its deliberations, except when "the majority of the committee acted upon the street," as he puts it in his testimony. Messrs. Brodhead and Tuttle seem to have been passive instruments in the hands of the others, and the only blame that attaches to them is that they did not open their eyes and look into what was going on around them.

Mr. Alvord pleads utter helplessness to avert the evils that finally came upon the bank because he was not allowed to vote; but his plea is not sound. He was the president of the bank, the highest official in charge of the moneys of the freedmen. His judgment told him, according to his own statement, that these moneys were being irregularly loaned and otherwise used. He said that he discountenanced and disapproved of many of the investments of the committee. But he kept his mouth shut. While the work of converting United States bonds into money and investing that money in the bonds of companies of doubtful character was going on; while the perversion of what was known as the "available fund" was in progress; while the charter was being violated also by the taking of real-estate securities of insufficient value, he gave no sign to the freedmen whose entire earnings were thus being swallowed up before his open eyes, and all the while he was the salaried guardian, the paid watchman of the freedmen's interests.

It seems to be too true that he and the remaining three members of the finance committee, Henry D. Cooke, William S. Huntington, Lewis Clephane, and the two actuaries, D. L. Eaton and George W. Stickney, inside of the bank, and Alexander R. Shepherd, Hallet Kilbourn, John O. Evans, J. V. W. Vanderburg, and others, outside of the bank, formed a ring, by the operations of which, at times and in ways without number, money was procured from the bank on worthless or insufficient securities, or on no securities whatever, to be used in hazardous enterprises and profitable speculations by members of the ring.

Henry D. Cooke was a member of the firm of Jay Cooke & Co. and president of the First National Bank of Washington at the same time that he was president of the finance committee of the Freedman's Bank; Huntington was cashier of the First National Bank while a member of this committee. Prior to the erection of the Freedman's Bank building the money of the freedmen was deposited in the First National; and when United States bonds were bought or sold, ostensibly for the benefit of the Freedman's Bank, they were bought or sold by the First National or Jay Cooke & Co., and the commissions went to them. The control of the freedmen's money was a matter of very considerable interest to Mr. Cooke on this account; but when it became important to sell large numbers of Central Pacific or Union Pacific or to "kite" Northern Pacific bonds, it was still more convenient to have the money of the freedmen at hand with which to buy them. A wholesome effect could thus be produced upon the stock or bond market for the benefit of the two banking institutions in which Mr. Cooke had such a large interest.

Let us note some of the devices, ingenious and otherwise, that were resorted to in order to open the door for investments that were not contemplated by the charter. The fifth section of the act of incorporation provided that the investments of the moneys of the bank should be "in the stocks, bonds, Treasury notes, or other securities of the United States." The board of trustees, deferring to the judgment of the finance committee, asked this question of the latter:

Are Pacific Railroad bonds a security contemplated by the charter?

And Messrs. Cook, Huntington, and Clephane answered:

Pacific Railroad bonds are not a security contemplated in the charter, but the Government bonds issued to the company are within the meaning of the law.

Accordingly, soon afterward follows a large sale of United States bonds through the agency of Jay Cooke & Co., on which that house got its commission, and the minutes show the purchase, at the dates given, of the following amounts of Pacific bonds:

June 8, 1868, Union Pacific	$15,000
June 23, 1868, Central Pacific	40,000
October 8, 1868, Central Pacific	300,000
February 17, 1869, Union Pacific	100,000
April 30, 1869, Union Pacific	200,000
May 4, 1869, Union Pacific	50,000

This shows an investment of $705,000 of the money of the freedmen in these bonds within eleven months.

But the recklessness of the finance committee is shown in another instance. I call the special attention of the House to this matter. The sixth section of the charter provided that one-third of the deposits was to be kept as an "available fund" to meet current payments of the corporation, and might be "left on deposit at interest, or otherwise, or in such available form as the trustees may direct." In June, 1868, it was proposed to set apart $50,000 of this "available fund" to be loaned on real estate. This was before the charter was amended so as to allow loans upon real estate to be made out of the other two-thirds of the deposits. But Mr. Cooke, as chairman of the finance committee, wrote a letter, which will be found incorporated in the minutes of the company, dated June 30, 1868, in which he gave a very just and sensible construction to this clause of the charter. He denied the power to invest in real estate, and said:

My understanding of the clause is that it authorizes the leaving of a certain sum on deposit, which deposit may draw interest or otherwise, but it must be always subject to check at sight; and I think a careful reading of the clause will justify this interpretation.

One would have thought that this "available fund" would certainly have been safe from attack at the hands of a committee that had such a clear and correct understanding of the charter. But we find this entry in the minute-book:

JANUARY 13, 1870.

Committee met at banking-house of H. D. Cooke.

The question under consideration was the recommendation to the board of the right to loan, under section 6, a portion of the idle funds now on deposit.

It was decided so to recommend.

D. L. EATON, Actuary.

And between that date and the 7th of the following month the sum of $99,593.43 was loaned out to various persons on all manner of securities not recognized by the charter, the same finance committee authorizing or ratifying the loans. This was the inauguration of an abuse which soon assumed monstrous proportions and has been a fruitful source of woes to the colored people. The barriers once broken down the door was thrown wide open, and out from the vaults of the bank went hundreds of thousands of dollars of the freedmen's money upon so-called securities that no prudent man of business, managing his own affairs, would have consented to buy at any price, and which remain to-day in the hands of the commissioners, utterly worthless, to tell the story of the flagrant outrage thus perpetrated upon these defenseless people.

Indeed, so utterly regardless of the charter and of their own former construction of it did Mr. Cooke and the finance committee become, that on the 9th day of May, 1871, we find them making a special report and argument in behalf of the proposition that the Freedman's Bank should become an agent for the sale of Northern Pacific Railroad bonds, in this extraordinary mode; the bank to pay par for the bonds and sell them if it could, for which it was to receive a commission, and to take the guarantee of Jay Cooke & Co. to buy them back within one year if not sold. This seems so surprising that lest we should be thought to be dealing in fiction we produce the words of Mr. Cooke himself, which, when read in the light of our present knowledge as to the value of those bonds, cause us to wonder by what strange streak of good fortune the bank was saved from being totally ingulfed in this yawning whirlpool. It is clear that on the 7th day of February, 1871, $50,000 of these Northern Pacific bonds were bought for the bank, and then the question seems to have arisen, according to the minutes, as to whether they should be bought or not. There was a considerable commotion about it, and the board of trustees passed a resolution May 3, 1871, "doubting the expediency of investing $50,000 in these bonds." Then came Mr. Cooke's special report on the 9th of the same month, in which he thus expresses the judgment of the finance committee:

The second resolution, as to the investment of the company in the bonds of the Northern Pacific Railway:

In investing its "available fund" the actuary found this state of facts: On the 7th of February, the day on which this purchase was made, the lowest priced 6 per cent. United States bond in the market was the 5-20 coupon bond of 1865 or 1867, 109¼. This bond at 109¼ pays the investor 5 4-10 per cent. The Northern Pacific Railroad bond at 100 pays 7 3-10 per cent. So that the Northern Pacific Railroad bond is better by 1 9-10 per cent.

Further: The actuary, with the consent of the finance committee and of the board [of trustees] in full session, bought the bonds for sale; and the conditions were that we receive 3½ per cent. commission in cash and 3½ per cent. in stock for all bonds disposed of, so that this company realizes actually in cash 5 4-10 per cent. more than on the best investment in Government bonds; and in addition thereto, 3½ per cent. in stock of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company for all bonds sold.

The only question, therefore, is, Are these bonds safe? In answer to this we show the written guarantee of Messrs. Jay Cooke & Co. to redeem them on demand any time within one year from date of purchase at same rates we gave for them.

It was these considerations of profit and of safety, abundant, as it seemed to the committee, which led to the investment in question, and they are still of force in their minds. As to the other statements of the resolution, touching the character of the bond itself, namely, "that the road is but begun, and may not for years be able to pay any interest out of its earnings," we would respectfully state that the [N. P. R. R.] company has already six hundred miles of road in operation; that nearly three hundred miles of track have been laid during the three hundred days which have elapsed since the commencement of work upon the road; that the company is endowed by Government with a grant of land amounting to over fifty millions of acres, worth at Government rates over $150,000,000 from the sale of which ample provision is made for the payment of the interest and [the] principal of the bonds, in addition to the security given by the road, its equipments, and all the property and franchises of the company.

These bonds were thus foisted upon the bank by this man, who had a large and direct pecuniary interest in the Northern Pacific Railroad, and although one of the commissioned and trusted guardians of the freedmen, he took money to pay for them from the "available fund," which he, as we have shown, had construed to be a fund "always subject to check at sight."

Another illustration of the faithlessness of the officers of the bank is furnished by their action with reference to the bonds of the Maryland Freestone Mining and Manufacturing Company. This corporation has become somewhat notorious throughout the country as the "Seneca Stone Company."

A tract of land, containing some six hundred acres, situate in Montgomery County, Maryland, was bought by Henry D. Cooke, Henry H. Dodge, and John L. Kidwell, from one Thomas Peters, for $70,000, and improvements were made thereon involving the expenditure of an additional sum of $50,000.

The whole amount of the investment was about $120,000. The land contained quarries of the Seneca stone, and these enterprising gentlemen procured a charter from the State of Maryland and organized the corporation whose name I have given. They caused five thousand shares of stock, each share of the par value of $100, to be issued, as follows:

Henry D. Cooke	1,664 shares.
Henry H. Dodge	1,663 shares.
John L. Kidwell	1,663 shares.
James Heath Dodge	5 shares.
Thomas Anderson	5 shares.

The financial success of the corporation depended upon the market that could be established or the demand that could be created for the stone to be taken from its quarries. To make this market and create this demand it was thought necessary to enlist the influence of men of prominence in political, military, social, and business circles, so that this company might furnish large quantities of stone for the erection of private residences and more particularly public buildings in the District of Columbia. The effort was therefore made to "put the stock where it would do the most good," and its recipients embrace persons in every branch of the public service and in all kinds of private business enterprises. It may be a matter of curiosity as well as interest and profit to examine the list of stockholders herewith furnished:

It will be remembered that Henry D. Cooke was one of the originators of this company, the largest owner of its stock, and the leading spirit of the finance committee of the Freedman's Bank. On the 26th day of April, 1871, the board of trustees of the bank adopted this resolution, and referred it to the finance committee:

Resolved, That the company ought not to loan its funds upon mining and manufacturing stocks or bonds; and that the loan of that nature now existing ought to be called in as soon as it may be.

To this resolution the finance committee, through Henry D. Cooke, made the following answer:

Special report finance committee.

First resolution: The committee beg leave to state respectfully that with the general proposition in this resolution they are in full accord. This case is, however, exceptional: First, (in that) the Maryland Mining and Manufacturing Company is a well-known and solvent company established and doing business in this city; its business is profitable; it is earning dividends; and its stocks and bonds are both well known and have ready sale in this market; that it has real estate to the amount of six hundred acres of land, the farm thus constituted being one of the most productive and profitable in the State of Maryland.

The machinery and buildings in use at their works have cost over $200,000, and the latter would sell for three-fourths of its original cost for use in any other quarry, even if it [they] were no longer needed for this; that the fifty-seven thousand dollars' worth of bonds of this company, which are held as collateral for this loan of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, ($27,000,) are really a first-mortgage bond secured upon all this real estate and other property; that the whole issue of bonds is not equal to more than one-third [of] the value of the property, and therefore the loan itself comes fully within the stipulation of the charter of the bank, to wit, a loan on real estate to the extent of one-half the value thereof; or even if this were not true, the loan comes fully and abundantly within the resolution unanimously adopted by the board May 12, 1870, touching the "available fund," that it shall be loaned "only on collateral of Government or railway bonds or other securities of a marketable value of at least 10 per cent. more than the loan." The marketable value of the bonds held here as collateral is at least double the loan. * * * Further, the quarry of this company is furnishing the stone from which the banking-house of this savings company is erecting. It employs constantly about three hundred colored men in its works and in this city, and it is in these respects an institution kindred with the bank; their interests are mutual. Those who from week to week and month to month watch over and strive to direct the best use of the freedmen's money in the bank are those who also afford them this field of valuable and profitable labor.

The evidence differs entirely from the statements made in this report. The business of the company was not profitable. If it earned any dividends, it is certain none were declared except a stock dividend of 60 per cent., when it was deemed expedient to water the stock, which dividend, it is proper to add, is entered on the stock-list which I have submitted as of the date of January 21, 1870. The bonds never had a ready sale in the market, and could not, by giving any natural meaning to words, be construed to come within the stipulations of the charter either as to real-estate loans or the disposition of the "available fund." And in view of the worthless bonds of this company which now lie in the vaults of the bank, it seems like cruel mockery for the finance committee to have asserted that it was an "institution kindred with the bank;" that "their interests were mutual;" and it was worse than mockery—it was adding insult to injury—to refer to the men who were engaged in ruinous speculation upon the money of the colored people as "those who from week to week and month to month watch over and strive to direct the best use of the freedmen's money in the bank."

There is no doubt, however, that those men who were pecuniarily interested both in the bank and the Seneca Stone Company did strive to make the latter "an institution kindred with the bank." They saw that the bank was full of money and that the Seneca Stone Company had none, and they very quickly jumped to the conclusion that it would be a good thing for the stockholders of the latter to put some of the money of the former into their bonds. This would supply the company with money for working purposes and would make a show of activity in its bonds. "By ways that were dark and tricks that were vain" the bank was saddled with a number of these bonds. It does not appear from the books exactly in what manner it was brought about. There is a mystery about the transactions between the bank and the company which has not been completely unraveled. The bank was made to pay 90 per cent., however, for $20,000 of the first-mortgage bonds, when they would not bring 50 per cent. upon the street. The bonds issued by the Seneca Stone Company were secured by a first and second mortgage, each for $100,000, and it will be observed that Mr. Cooke, in the report quoted, speaks of "$57,000 in bonds then held by the bank as a first mortgage." But the actuary, George W. Stickney, makes the following report as covering the transactions of these "kindred" institutions:

Statement of the actuary of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company in regard to the transactions had with the Maryland Freestone Mining and Manufacturing Company and with Messrs. Kilbourn & Evans.

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 6, 1873.

J. M. LANGSTON, Esq.,
Chairman Special Committee:

At your request I would make the following statement as to transactions had by this company with the Maryland Mining and Manufacturing Company and with Messrs. Kilbourn & Evans.

First. As shown by the books of the company May 18, 1870, $4,000 was loaned to said Maryland Freestone and Mining Company, secured by $10,000 of their second-mortgage bonds.

Second. July 25, 1870, the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company bought of said Maryland Freestone and Mining Company $20,000 of their first-mortgage bonds at 90, with the verbal understanding that the company would take said bonds back from the bank at par after two years.

Third. July 17, 1871, a further loan was made of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company by said mining company of $27,000, secured by $49,000 second-mortgage bonds of the same as collateral. This statement shows that up to January 2, 1872, the bank held of second-mortgage bonds of the Maryland Mining and Manufacturing Company $30,000, and $20,000 of the first mortgage.

Fourth. On January 2, 1872, as shown by the books, the transactions as between the bank and said company were settled, said company at that date being in debt to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company for cash loaned:

First. Loan of May 18, 1870	$4,000 00
Second. Loan of July 25, 1870, being amount paid for twenty first-mortgage bonds	18,000 00
Third. Loan of July 17, 1871	27,000 00
Fourth. Interest due on above loans December 30, 1871	2,785 73
Total due Freedman's Savings and Trust Company	51,785 73

At this date, according to the books of this company, a transaction covering this whole matter was had with Messrs. Kilbourn & Evans, whereby their note was given for $50,000, payable six months after date and secured as follows, namely: Twenty-four shares American Dredging Company, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, $2,400; seventy-five shares Metropolitan Paving Company stock, 100, par value, $7,500; one thousand shares market-house stock, 50, par value, $50,000; forty shares National Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, $2,000; one hundred and fifty bonds Maryland Mining and Manufacturing Company, $500 each, $75,000; and payment by the Maryland Freestone Mining and Manufacturing Company of $1,785.73 on account of interest. This payment was made by check on the First National Bank, signed by C. W. Hayden, treasurer.

From this report it would seem that the bank held only $20,000 of first-mortgage bonds, but held, in addition thereto, $59,000 of second-mortgage bonds, making $79,000 in all as collateral security for the debt of $51,785.73. About this time, December 30, 1871, consternation struck the ring. The fact that these worthless bonds of the Seneca Stone Company had found their way into the vaults of the bank became a common topic of conversation and unfavorable comment on the streets. The newspapers got hold of it. There was danger that the public would be made acquainted with the "true inwardness" of these nefarious operations by which the freedmen were being swindled. An infamous scheme was devised by which the public should be deceived, the bond transactions be covered up, and the bank be put in a worse condition than it was then; and the martyr-patriot, Hallet Kilbourn, and John O. Evans came to the rescue. The following secret agreement was entered into:

Agreement between Hallet Kilbourn and John O. Evans and the finance committee of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company.

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY,
Washington, D. C., December 30, 1873.

The Freedman's Savings and Trust Company has this day made a loan to John O. Evans and Hallet Kilbourn of $50,000 upon the following-described securities as collateral to their note: $2,400 stock American Dredging Company, Philadelphia; $2,000 Metropolitan Insurance Company stock, Washington, District of Columbia; $75,000 Maryland Freestone Manufacturing and Mining Company 6 per cent. gold bonds, Montgomery County, Maryland; $7,500 Metropolitan Paving Company stock, Washington, District of Columbia; $50,000 Washington Market-House stock, Washington, District of Columbia. Said note is payable six months after date, with 10 per cent. interest; and in case said Evans and Kilbourn's note shall not be paid as it becomes due, then it is fully agreed that the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company shall keep the $75,000 bonds of the Maryland Freestone Manufacturing and Mining Company as full payment of said note and interest, and surrender to said Evans and Kilbourn the other securities above enumerated, (save and except the $75,000 bonds of the Maryland Freestone Manufacturing and Mining Company,) together with their note.

D. L. EATON, Actuary.

Finance Committee.

A true copy of the agreement and indorsements.

GEO. W. STICKNEY.

Of course Evans & Kilbourn's note was not paid when it became due, and then followed the consummation of the iniquitous job, as shown by this receipt:

Received, Washington, D. C., November 15, 1873, of the actuary of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company the within-mentioned securities, with the exception of the $75,000 bonds of the Maryland Freestone Manufacturing and Mining Company, with the understanding that our note for $50,000 is to be returned to us on or before the 18th instant.

HALLET KILBOURN.
JOHN O. EVANS.

Received note as agreed above.

JOHN O. EVANS.

Thus the money of the freedmen was first taken from the bank on securities that were not worth anything, except the $20,000 of first-mortgage bonds; then this scheme of depositing the note and additional securities was resorted to for the purpose of concealing the transaction from inquisitive eyes; and in the final shuffle Kilbourn & Evans got back their note and securities, and the bank got cheated out of its $20,000 of first-mortgage bonds, and had $16,000 of second-mortgage bonds substituted for them, which, with the other $59,000 held as security for the loans to the mining company and $20,000 more held as security for the loan to J. C. Kennedy, make $95,000 of second-mortgage bonds, which are not worth a dollar in the market to-day. If this be not a swindle that calls loudly for the punishment of all who were engaged in it, I am at a loss to know what state of facts would constitute one.

In this connection it is but simple justice to Mr. Kidwell that a portion of his testimony bearing upon this matter be given. And while it evinces an earnest purpose on his part to save the bank from loss on account of these bonds, it shows how utterly indifferent Mr. Cooke and the other officers were as to whether it was saved from loss or not:

Question. Do you know anything of the juggle by which this loan to the Seneca Stone Company appeared for a time to be extinguished by a note of John O. Evans and Hallet Kilbourn, and how afterward it was revived, and Evans and Kilbourn's note was withdrawn from the Freedman's Bank, and nothing left except the $95,000 in second-mortgage bonds of the Seneca Stone Company?

Answer. It was a piece of juggiery which I know nothing about and could not possibly have anything to do with. I have no association with that kind of people. When it was known to me that the loan at the Freedman's Bank had been created to the extent of $50,000, and that second-mortgage bonds to the amount of $95,000 had been deposited as security, I said to Henry D. Cooke that I felt unpleasant about that transaction, and I offered, with him, to raise $25,000 by the sale of real estate, if he would do the same, and to take up those bonds, myself and himself, from the Freedman's Bank, paying them dollar for dollar. He promised me from month to month to do it, but he failed to do it. I then said to him, "Mr. Cooke, this thing does not suit me; I will not have any imputation resting on my children growing out of this matter, and although it will give me inconvenience, I will make a proposition to you, (he was then one of the trustees of the Freedman's Bank:) I will give the bank real estate to the amount of $50,000 to take up those bonds, and I will select one man and let the bank select one man to fix the value of the property." He carried my proposition, as he said, to the Freedman's Bank, but it was declined. He soon vacated his position as trustee of the Freedman's Bank, and Mr. Moses Kelly, who was then cashier of the Metropolitan Bank, succeeded him as trustee. Mr. Kelly and I were friends. I went to Mr. Kelly and I renewed this proposition to him. I told him that I felt unpleasant about the transaction, and I induced Mr. Kelly to renew my proposition to the Freedman's Bank. Mr. Kelly proposed it at two different meetings of the board of trustees. He was again unsuccessful; and, strange to say, he reported to me that the proposition was defeated by the colored members of the board. In that proposition I offered to give real estate on Vermont avenue, a little above the Arlington House, on the corner of K street and running up Vermont avenue to L street, at $1.65 a foot, for that $50,000. The next time the offer was made through the actuary, Mr. Stickney, and with the knowledge of the president, Mr. Alvord. It was again refused. I afterward sold a portion of that property at $1.80 a foot, having offered it to the Freedman's Bank for $1.65, and out of the proceeds I loaned $30,000 to the Seneca Stone Company, with the hope of getting the Freedman's Bank paid. I made that loan with the view of giving vitality and force to the Seneca Stone Company, in hopes that it would pay the debt to that bank. I did it to sustain the credit of the company.

There is no doubt that the names of the illustrious men who were reputed to be stockholders of the Seneca Stone Company had much to do with quieting the apprehensions of the colored trustees as to the value of its bonds and inducing them not to favor the exchange of them for Mr. Kidwell's real estate.

But Henry D. Cooke was also connected with the government of the District of Columbia, as were George W. Balloch, of the examining committee; William S. Huntington, of the finance committee; Z. B. Richards, of the board of trustees; and D. L. Eaton, actuary of the Freedman's Bank. The board of public works was presided over by Mr. Cooke and controlled by Alexander R. Shepherd. There came a time when money was wanting to sustain the contractors under the board. The board of public works had no money, but it issued certificates. These certificates would not sell in the market for anything near their face, and its employés had to be paid for their labor. With five officers of the Freedman's Bank connected with the board of public works, it was not a hard matter for Mr. Cooke and the finance committee to come to the conclusion that the board of public works was another "institution kindred with the bank;" and accordingly a raid was made upon its "available fund" to meet this exigency. Contractors swarmed around the doors of the bank. The actuary, D. L. Eaton, was bribed by a one-half interest in a hundred-thousand-dollar sewer-pipe contract with Vandenburgh; and the result is that Vandenburgh's indebtedness to the bank, as stated by the commissioners, is to-day $144,164.83. All sorts of "irregularities" appear in connection with loans upon District securities and the worthless bonds of other corporations, in which members of the finance committee were interested either as corporators or stockholders. Those connected with the District government obtained whatever accommodations they desired upon securities that could not be negotiated anywhere else.

The facility with which Mr. Shepherd could get money from the bank is shown by the following testimony of Mr. Stickney, the actuary:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Do you know of any loan at any time made to Vandenburgh, on the personal assurance of Alexander R. Shepherd that it would be paid in a day or two.

Answer. That loan was not made to Vandenburgh. I recollect the transaction you refer to. It occurred in November, 1873. I was away at the time, (simply for the Saturday.) Governor Shepherd and Colonel Magruder came to Mr. Alvord and got the loan of $50,000 on a $30,000 check on the First National Bank, drawn by J. A. Magruder, treasurer, and on a $20,000 certificate of the board of public works, to be paid out of the first moneys that the board received when the appropriation was made by Congress. I found out from Mr. Tuttle, the assistant treasurer, as soon as the check was made for the amount of the appropriation, and the next morning, before the bank was opened, I went to the First National Bank and deposited this $30,000 check, and got it placed to my credit by Mr. Swayne, the cashier of the First National Bank. The $20,000 certificate ran along without being paid until February or March, 1874. One day, as I was in the Metropolitan National Bank, Mr. Moses Kelly said that the board of public works wanted a loan of $35,000, and would give a 6 per cent. bond on the District of Columbia for it. Mr. Kelly was one of the finance committee at the time, and he advised that the loan be made, saying that it was a good loan, and the bonds were good. The market-price was then 85, and the bonds could be sold in any amount for that. I told him I was not willing to make that loan, unless the $20,000 certificate was included in it, and bonds deposited enough to cover the $55,000. That was agreed to, and I made the loan of $35,000, and took $65,000 in bonds to cover that loan and the $20,000 certificate, which made the amount $55,000. That ran along some time, something less than a month, when the whole amount was paid. Mr. Vandenburgh had nothing whatever to do with it, unless perhaps he got the money from the board of public works. The loan of $50,000 was made to Governor Shepherd by Mr. Alvord.

By Mr. STENGER:

Q. What was the certificate worth at that time?

A. None of the certificates or obligations of the board of public works were ever worth less than 85 or 90 up to that date. None of them brought less than 80 or 85 until after the panic. That certificate was put into this new loan.

The President of the bank, upon the mere request of Mr. Shepherd, thus paid out $50,000 of the freedmen's money, and took as security therefor nothing but the check of the treasurer of the board of public works for $30,000 and a certificate of the same board for $20,000, which would not have sold on the street for more than $17,000 or $18,000, when he knew that there would be no no funds to meet either the check or the certificate until Congress would make an appropriation.

Another instance shows how Mr. Shepherd helped to swell Vandenburgh's indebtedness to the bank which still remains unpaid, and how he failed to keep his promises in connection therewith. The same witness testifies:

By Mr. STENGER:

Q. Did you never say to C. B. Purvis, or to any other person, that you had done one wrong thing, and that was allowing that money to be paid to Vandenburgh on the personal pledge of Shepherd?

A. No, sir; I have no recollection of that. I know where Dr. Purvis got that idea. In November, 1872, Vandenburgh came to me and wanted some more money—five or six thousand dollars—to pay his men. I told him that he was so much indebted to the bank that I did not feel like letting him have any more money on the securities of the board of public works, as other people seemed to get their money and we could not. He said it was for Mr. Shepherd. I went to Mr. Shepherd and he said, "If you allow Vandenburgh to have that amount of money now, you shall have all that is due you paid up when we get the first appropriation; but if you let him have any more, it will be your own lookout." I let him have about $5,000 on that occasion, and when the appropriation was made I got $22,000 of him instead of some hundred and odd thousand, as was promised; but as to any sum of $30,000, I know nothing about it.

Q. Did Mr. Shepherd agree that he would pay that money himself?

A. No; he agreed that it should be paid out of the first appropriation that the board got from Congress.

Q. And you got $22,000 instead of $100,000?

A. Yes. There was due the bank from Vandenburgh and the paving company some $100,000, and we got about $22,000.

Q. You mean to say that when that loan of $5,000 was made, Mr. Shepherd said that you should have the whole amount that had been loaned by the bank, which at that time was over $100,000.

A. Yes, sir.

The "available fund" was intended, as Mr. Cooke expressed it, to be a fund subject to check at sight. When the bank failed the amount of loans standing unpaid that had been made out of this fund was $353,532.10, and for the payment of this sum the bank had a list of the following motley securities: Northern Pacific Railroad bonds, shares of Young Men's Christian Association stock, "Seneca stone" bonds, shares of the International Steamship and Railway Supply Company, Metropolitan paving stock, Morris Mining Company (Colorado) stock, chattel mortgages on furniture in the Arlington and Saint James Hotels, State bonds of Virginia, city of Philadelphia bonds, shares of East Capitol Building Association, mortgage bonds of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company, Detroit Car Loan Company stock, shares of the Capital Publishing Company, shares of the American Seal-Lock Company, Columbia Railroad stock, State of Florida bonds, bonds of the First Congregational church, Second National Bank stock, District of Columbia 8 per cent. certificates, auditor's certificates, paving and curb-stone tax, orders on and acceptances of the board of public works, orders on paymaster Treasury Department, orders on and acceptances of treasurer of county schools, and life-insurance policies. There does not seem to have been any money in the "available fund" at that date unless it was an item of "$45.20 nickel" set down by the commissioners as belonging to the principal office. The vast majority of these loans were overdue and had been for periods ranging from one month to two years. The last report of the commissioners, dated January 18, 1876, shows that of this "available fund" that was always to be "subject to check at sight," there remained still unpaid, at that date, loans amounting to $248,030.24, and the chances are that nearly, if not all, of these will be lost.

But almost contemporaneous with the first raid made upon the "available fund" a change was wrought in the charter by which the field of investment for the other moneys of the bank was enlarged. The original act of incorporation was amended on May 6, 1870, by authorizing the investment of one-half of the loanable money "in bonds or notes, secured by mortgage on real estate in double the value of the loan." This gave rise to a small army of real-estate brokers, who besieged the bank and, by the practice of getting the biggest possible loan on the least possible real-estate security, swelled finally the losses which overthrew the bank. Kilbourn & Latta were appointed regular appraisers of real estate for the bank, and at the same time acted as brokers in procuring loans from the bank. This acting in a double capacity in matters so vital to the interests of the freedmen does not admit of extenuation. It threw open the door to the admission of securities that were by no means double the value of the loan as required by the charter. This has been abundantly proven by the large losses that the bank has suffered on its real-estate securities. The instances are very rare in which the real-estate loans have been collected without suit, and in very many cases the securties are utterly worthless, so that the suits have entailed expense without any benefit. These losses have not only been incurred by false valuations but from defects in title and prior liens, which were not seemingly inquired after at the time the loans were made, and from downright conspiracies to defraud.

The testimony discloses "irregularities," in addition to those already referred to, on the part of George W. Stickney, the last actuary, which cannot be and are not denied, whereby the bank has lost large sums of money. There has been a misapplication of funds on his part, which cannot properly be defined by any other name than that of embezzlement. Besides, his account in the books is so confused that it is impossible to understand it. Two competent experts have certified, in a report which will be found annexed to the report of the committee, that his account is "perfectly unintelligible" to them. And, in regard to the general character of the books and accounts, these gentlemen say, "We found leaves cut out from the original ledger, leaves without number pasted together, balances not brought forward, and of which, at this date, no trace has been found; and these omissions occur in every book so far examined." These experts conclude their report as follows:

In conclusion, we would say that our duties have been laborious. We do not make comments, it being our purpose to state facts. We have presented figures from which your honorable committee can draw conclusions. It is our privilege as well as our duty, however, to state that a more perverted arrangement could scarcely have been devised by human ingenuity if the design had been specially directed to obscure the transactions of the institution. Incompetency at the beginning may be made an excuse for palpable errors and omissions, but when eminent bankers direct investments and indicate the business of the institution this apology fails.

We cannot suppose there was a "lack of common sense" on the part of the managers of the concern, but certainly there is a notable deficiency in all the well-understood principles of accounts, for which experience should have provided a remedy, even for the most ignorant and unskilled, much more for competent financiers and professed accountants.

There are three commissioners now in charge of the bank, each receiving a salary of $3,000. There is no necessity for this. One person can easily attend to the duties. Indeed, it is admitted that two of the present commissioners really do nothing, and give to the third a portion of their salaries for doing the work. But I am of the opinion that a change in the entire commission is desirable. The acting commissioner has been subjected to serious charges, and although he denies them, grave suspicions of their truthfulness still attach to him. But I do not desire to take up the time of the committee further on this point, because I have a stronger reason, in my judgment, why there should be a change. These commissioners have been in office two years, and men who have plundered the freedmen—well known to them to have done so—not only go unwhipped of justice, but no effort has been made on their part to hold them civilly or criminally responsible for their misconduct. For myself, I have no doubt of the right and power of Congress to abolish this commission, and being fully convinced of the propriety of an entire change, for this, if for no other reason, I shall support the amendment offered by my friend and colleague on the committee, [Mr. BRADFORD,] which has this object in view, and which provides for the appointment of a new and competent man by the Secretary of the Treasury, under whose supervision such commissioner is to act. I regard it as of great importance to the freedmen that the House should act on the pending bill and amendments at an early day.

Mr. Chairman, the freedman no longer regards the Washington ring as a myth. To him its existence is a stern, solemn, sad fact. It has cast a great shadow over his home and life. It has dissipated the earnings and savings of wearisome days. It has given him over to many, many nights of unrest. It has doomed him to years of harder toil. It has brought penury, want, suffering, and deep distress to his loved ones. It has driven hope from his heart. It has undermined his confidence in man. It has shaken his faith in God.

When the president of the bank was interrogated before the committee as to the pecuniary condition of the actuary, he replied:

I think that he is pretty largely interested in a good many parcels of property which may come to something, or on which he may lose everything as the shrinkage goes on, but I think that all these things will shrink away from him as they have done from the rest of us.

Mr. Chairman, what a commentary is this! "These things" have, indeed, shrunk away from some of these men. Some there are who fattened upon the freedmen's savings for a time and are now total bankrupts in fortune. But these are exceptional cases. Most of them have large possessions. And as I see them reveling in the lap of luxury; as I observe them arrayed in fine linen and faring sumptuously every day; as I witness the investment of their ill-gotten gains in magnificent business-houses and palatial residences along these beautiful streets; as I hear of them, by the power of their wealth and social influence, packing and debauching juries, controlling courts, and subsidizing newspapers; as I listen to the story of their nearness to him who executes the laws for this great, free people—and then turn my eyes upon the poor freedman, ragged, hungry, suffering, wretched, robbed, whose money has been filched from him by these very people—I wonder whether, if there be a God in heaven, as I believe there is, all these things shall not, one day, "shrink away" from them also.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

Here the committee informally rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having taken the chair, a message from the Senate was communicated to the House by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks.

The message informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 2824) to change the name of the steamboat Paragon, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 109) for the issue of silver coin.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 16) to authorize the President to appoint commissioners to attend the international conference upon the subject of the relative values of gold and silver; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. COX. I desire to move that the committee rise for one moment, that I may ask the House to concur in an amendment made by the Senate to the silver-coin bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. HOLMAN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, pursuant to the order of the House, had under consideration the special order, a bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SILVER COIN.

Mr. COX. I move that the joint resolution (H. R. No. 109) for the issue of silver coin, returned from the Senate with an amendment, be taken from the Speaker's table, and that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in. This is the bill as to the issue of $10,000,000 of silver coin, and the amendment of the Senate is to strike out the word "now."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill in line 4 by striking out the word "now," after the word "coin;" so that it will read: "the silver coin in the Treasury."

Add the following section:

SEC. 2. That the trade-dollar shall not hereafter be a legal tender, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to limit from time to time the coinage thereof to such an amount as he may deem sufficient to meet the export demand for the same.

Mr. COX. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the joint resolution be read in full, as proposed to be amended by the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, under such limits and regulations as will best secure a just and fair distribution of the same through the country, may issue the silver coin in the Treasury to an amount not exceeding $10,000,000, in exchange for an equal amount of legal-tender notes; and the notes so received in exchange shall be kept as a special fund, separate and apart from all other money in the Treasury, and be re-issued only upon the retirement and destruction of a like sum of fractional currency received at the Treasury in payment of dues to the United States; and said fractional currency, when so substituted, shall be destroyed and held as part of the sinking fund, as provided in the act approved April 17, 1876.

SEC. 2. That the trade-dollar shall not hereafter be a legal tender, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to limit from time to time the coinage thereof to such an amount as he may deem sufficient to meet the export demand for the same.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana, rose.

Mr. COX. I move to concur in the Senate amendments, and on that motion I call the previous question.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I see it is provided that the trade-dollar shall not hereafter be a legal tender. Is that one of the amendments we are called upon to concur in?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were again read.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I suggest——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDERS] yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL?]

Mr. COX. I yield for a moment to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDERS] has the floor.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I desire to say that I am opposed to this amendment, which proposes to take from the silver coin of the country its legal-tender qualities.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Indiana. This is a very important subject, and, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] will permit, I would suggest that this bill and the Senate amendments be printed in the RECORD, and that the gentleman from New York have the privilege of calling it up in the morning. A change in a word is sometimes a very serious matter in legislation, and this question involving the currency of the country ought to be approached with great care and decided upon only after due deliberation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make that proposition?

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I agree that this is an important question.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I did not yield the floor to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I have no objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania if the House will have the privilege of discussing the question when it is again called up.

Mr. COX. I did not yield the floor to the gentleman from Indiana. I called the previous question on the motion to concur in the Senate amendments. But I am willing to withdraw that call and to accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will have to rule that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDERS] was properly recognized by the Chair; and necessarily so, the previous question not having been called.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I will yield, that the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to have the amendments printed and called up for action to-morrow morning may be submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD, and that by unanimous consent the consideration of them be postponed till to-morrow morning.

Mr. SPRINGER. Why not commit the bill and amendments to the Committee on Banking and Currency? I make that motion.

Mr. COX. There is no necessity for that.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I desire to have it understood that when the joint resolution and amendments are reported back they do not come back under the operation of the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again state the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and inquire whether there is objection or not. The proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is that the amendments of the Senate be printed in the RECORD, and that the subject be postponed until to-morrow morning and then be considered. Is there objection to this proposition?

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDERS] will proceed.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield for a motion that the bill, with the amendments of the Senate, be recommitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency and printed?

Mr. COX. I desire to say this——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana is entitled to the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. Is it not competent to move to postpone further consideration of this matter?

Mr. COX. It is generally understood all around here that I called the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair very properly and necessarily recognized the gentleman from Indiana, as the gentleman from New York did not call the previous question.

Mr. COX. I presume the Chair will take my statement that I did call the previous question.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. The gentleman from New York certainly did call the previous question, and there are forty members here who heard him call it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair heard when the gentleman called the previous question, and it was after the Chair had necessarily recognized the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COX. I never left the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I withdraw my objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it is going to provoke discussion.

Mr. COX. I desire to say that when I took the floor I had no idea of bringing up a debate on this question at this time while the appropriation bill is pending. I want to advance the appropriation bills so as to give the people this money as soon as possible.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will restate the question: The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the Senate amendments be printed in the RECORD, and that the subject be postponed until to-morrow morning, and be then considered by the House.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Then I offer that as an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland has not the floor, and is not in order.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I object to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I think we had better dispose of this matter to-day.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I move to refer the bill, with the pending amendments, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield for that motion?

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. No, sir; I do not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the gentleman from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire at this time to say to the House that I am not disposed to yield to any further motions committing questions of this character to the Committee on Banking and Currency. Its delays and our past experience is of such a nature that I feel confident I shall be sustained in this position. This currency question assumes many forms and will not be put down or silenced by any individual, committee, or political party. Here, for instance, is a proposition coming from the Senate to demonetize silver. Sir, I admit that the quality of our money is not what I desire it should be, but under no circumstances will I consent to any further depreciation of its value by demonetizing its power in the payment of debts contracted under it.

I understand full well why this motion was made. It is another effort in the interest of the bondholders against the people, and in the same direction as that of the act of 1869, and, permit me to say, almost as great a fraud upon the people as was that act. Why? Because under the acts by which the bonded debt of the Government was originally created every dollar of its principal and interest could have been justly paid in silver, but because silver has now depreciated in value it is insisted that we should not offer it in payment of that debt. That such is the case is no fault of ours. Our duty is to act fairly toward both the debtor and creditor class, and if, as some hold, the agreement was made to pay that debt either in gold or silver, then, sir, it is at the option of the debtor to say in which kind of coin that payment shall be made. It will not injure the credit of the Government if we offer silver in payment of our debts. I do not understand that the credit either of individuals or the Government is impaired by a strict compliance with contracts, and whatever they contracted to do they ought to fulfill, and nothing more.

It is insisted that our bonds will be sent home and thrown on the market. That is just where I want them. I would be pleased to see every bond of the United States now held by foreigners brought home and the interest on them paid to our own people. If men abroad do not want to hold our bonds, and receive payment in accordance with the contract, let them send them here and they will find plenty of purchasers.

I do not understand that those who hold our bonds in foreign countries are entitled to any more consideration than those who hold them here. If persons abroad see proper to invest in our securities they do it with the understanding that their payment is regulated by the laws of the United States, and that they are entitled to no privileges beyond its citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I want every contract strictly complied with. I would not cast a vote in this House or elsewhere to relieve the debtor from one cent justly due the creditor. Neither will I vote to take one cent from the debtor and give it to the creditor when he is not justly and lawfully entitled to it. Whatever is due I will vote to pay; no more, no less.

In this case it is the right of the debtor class to pay their debts in silver, and I am in favor of making it a full legal tender in payment of all debts public and private. The object of the Senate amendment is to take it out of the power of the debtor to offer silver in payment of debts created when silver was a full legal tender.

Silver has depreciated in value because it has been demonetized. Now, Mr. Speaker, on the contrary, I hold that it is our duty to make it as valuable as possible and to perpetuate that value by determining it by the stamp of the Government. We should give to it all the qualities of money it possessed when this debt was contracted, and then offer it in payment of that debt; and what honorable man could complain when the contract has thus been fully and fairly complied with?

It is argued that we ought to increase the quantity of silver that is contained in a dollar. I insist that this is not right. There was a certain dollar that was current in this country, that was legal tender, of a certain weight and fineness, when this debt was created. I want the same standard kept up. I do not consent that because silver has depreciated in value it is our duty now to put more silver in the dollar than there was at the time the debt was created; not at all. It would be just as fair and reasonable to say that if a debt was contracted to be paid in corn or wheat, and the corn or wheat should decline in price below that fixed in the contract, there should be more wheat or corn put in a bushel. The same argument holds good in the one case as the other.

Our policy is to act fairly and honorably with both parties to this contract. I am in favor of the old silver dollar containing four hundred and twelve and one-half grains of silver, and not four hundred and twenty, as is now proposed. But if we cannot get that, I will take the trade-dollar with its four hundred and twenty grains.

I insist that it is unfair to the debtor class to demonetize silver. But the question is whether that class can get justice done them in this Congress. I do not think they can; they never have, and I doubt whether they ever will. This is one of the many cunningly devised schemes to take money from one class and put it into the pockets of another.

We have men here who claim that the currency of this country should be based upon coin. Now silver, when coined, was a full legal tender, equal with gold, until 1873. It is now proposed to take from it that quality and to leave gold as the sole standard of value.

Mr. Speaker, I want members of this House to distinctly understand why it is that this effort is being made against silver. I hold that it is simply to increase the purchasing power of the bondholder, whose interest is paid him in gold. I also hold that the currency of the country should be based upon its credit, upon all its gold, silver, real estate, labor, and everything possessing value.

But if that policy cannot be adopted; if the "hard-money men," as they are styled, are to succeed, (which means the perpetuation of national banks based upon coin,) then I want a basis for the currency which has some existence, as has not neither in the Treasury, the vaults of the banks, nor in the pockets of the people. I want a broader basis than gold alone can give; one that gives to the people an amount of money sufficient to transact their business.

Let their policy be carried out, and every business man in the country will soon become bankrupt.

If their theory is carried into effect, and silver demonetized and legal-tender notes retired, what will be left for the people to use as money?

Under their policy everything is to depreciate except the bonds of the Government, the interest of which to-day has three times the purchasing power it had when those bonds were first issued; the advantage to the bondholding class (who seem to have so many ardent friends here) will thus be made clear. Now, take from the people the legal-tender currency, demonetize silver, and 1 per cent. upon the income from bonds would be equal to 4 per cent. of that which it is now, and the result will be to concentrate all the wealth of this country in the hands of a few men; and it is this that I want to protest against. I want some legislation in the interest of the producers of this country. I want its industries looked after, as well as the interests of the non-producers.

Mr. Speaker, I hope this amendment will not be agreed to. Although the trade-dollar is now a legal tender to the amount of $5, I want this House to say to the Senate that it shall go no further with this contracting policy. This idea that it will not do to have two standards of value is a new one, known only to the statesmen of this day. Sir, we have always had two standards; we never, until 1873, had anything else. It cannot be defended that because silver has been discountenanced as money by some of the monarchial governments of Europe it should also be demonetized here. I want to know if it is the policy of an American Congress to shape its legislation after such governments! I want to know whether that is to be our future policy. That is just what is now being done by this specie-basis, contraction policy inaugurated by England in the interest of her bondholders, who soon became her lords and masters and reduced the number of landholders in that country from one hundred and sixty thousand to less than forty thousand and have filled her with peasantry and paupers ever since. Will not the same policy produce the same result here? Is it to be our policy to legislate all the property of this country into the hands of a few men and to make slaves of all the balance? If so, let such legislation be carried into effect. Mr. Speaker, again I say I hope this amendment will not be concurred in by this House.

Mr. COX. Inasmuch as these amendments simply strike out the word "now," which is an indifferent matter, and add a new section, and as there may be a necessity for some consideration whether that provision should be attached to this bill or to the other, or whether it might not be wise to add our other bill to this and seek a conference with the Senate on the disagreement, I move to refer the bill, with the amendments, to the Committee on Banking and Currency; and on that motion I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion of Mr. COX to refer the bill and amendments was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole upon the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

Mr. COOK. Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the House in the discussion of any mere abstract or political question, but shall address myself to two questions in which my section of the country is greatly interested. They are questions which present the strongest claims to the consideration of the House and the country. The war is over, and no human being desires to renew it, certainly not any of those who participated personally in it.

The Union still exists, and the Constitution, with its amendments. Every charge and every insinuation that the southern people desire to renew hostility to the Government is most untrue and absolutely false. They most earnestly desire the peace and prosperity of the whole country.

All parties and all sections acknowledge their allegiance to the Constitution and their obligations to support it. Its highest interpretation and binding force are derived from the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. Beyond that there is no appeal, and its decisions hitherto have been the recognized law of the land in every court and in every State in the Union. Among the various acts of Congress of which our people complain there are two the operations of which have been sorely felt by the South and regarded as acts of peculiar hardship and imposition, and not justified by any authority found in the Constitution. To relieve the southern people as far as possible from the gross injustice of these acts, I introduced in the last Congress two bills, which were referred to the proper committees, and there they perished, no report ever having been made upon them. Early in the present session I again introduced the same bills; they were properly referred, and so far no action has been taken upon either of them. I allude to House bill No. 232, to refund the cotton tax collected after the war, and to House bill No. 233, authorizing the payment of the proceeds of the sales of cotton seized after the war and which are now in the Treasury of the United States.

In the four years succeeding the war $68,723,038.79 was collected as tax upon the single product of raw cotton. This tax was first levied during the war and, after various amendments and modifications, was repealed by the same party which enacted it. I will devote but little of my time to the discussion of the constitutionality of this act, first, because it was mainly repealed from the fact that it was regarded as not warranted by any provision of the Constitution, and, second, upon the questions of the constitutionality of that act being carried to the Supreme Court of the United States that court was equally divided, the Chief Justice being absent. The doubt raised by this division of the court upon the constitutionality of this tax-act should be given to the tax-payer, and against the Government.

Section 8, article 1, of the Constitution gives Congress "the power to collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises," "but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." What is meant by being uniform throughout the United States? That these "duties, imposts, and excises" should fall alike upon all the citizens of each of the States of this Union. Was this tax so "uniform throughout the United States?" Did it affect any State except those in which the cotton was grown? Was it not as absolutely restricted to the cotton States as if they had been specified by name, and was it not intended that such should be its effect and operation? If, then, this tax was either a duty, impost, or excise, it was in clear violation of the above article of the Constitution, which declares that all duties, imposts, and excises "shall be uniform throughout the United States." If it was neither a duty, impost, or excise, it was a direct tax; if a direct tax, it should have been "apportioned among all the States according to their population."

The ninth section of the first article of the Constitution declares that—

> No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken.

Such is the language of the Constitution. I do not know that it has ever been held that Congress can impose a direct tax on land in kind and collect it of the individual owner.

Is it not, then, a forced construction of the power of Congress to levy this tax upon certain agricultural products, limited and restricted absolutely to certain States? If the land itself is not subject to this tax, ought not its products to be equally exempt? If it was now proposed to tax the silver and gold ore dug from the earth, or the wheat, hemp, barley, and flax which is grown in this country, upon what sections of it would it fall and what would be the roar and clamor raised against such an unequal and unjust tax? And yet, sir, it would be no more unequal or unjust than the cotton tax levied upon the South. The same section and article of the Constitution provides that—

> No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State.

Is not almost the entire cotton crop of the South grown for exportation, and is it not put upon the market at once for that purpose? By the order under which this tax was first collected, no farmer could remove a bale from his farm until he had paid the tax. This was subsequently modified, and it could not then be removed beyond the collection districts. If cotton, therefore, was an article of export from any State, this tax was levied without any authority of the Constitution. But this tax was most unjust and unequal in another view as between those who paid it. The tax was arbitrary in this, that it was the same on all grades of cotton, the poorest and the finest. It was also unjust because it was not regulated by the value of the cotton. It was two and a half cents per pound in 1865–'66, when cotton was worth thirty to forty cents per pound, and in 1867 when cotton declined to ten cents per pound in December it was taxed three cents, and it was proposed on this very floor to tax it as high as six and ten cents per pound, and evidence was taken to prove that it could well pay it.

The bill which I introduced provides that the amount collected in each of the States shall be refunded to the States respectively, and that the Legislatures thereof shall make provision for the payment of the amount to those parties who actually paid the tax; and it will be found that the planter in nine cases out of ten paid the tax. This bill protects the Government in thus limiting the amount paid out to the amount received by it, for it is well known that millions were collected of the people which have never been accounted for by the agents of the Government. The great frauds perpetrated upon the Government revenues by officials in the whisky ring, in the Freedmen's Bureau, and in the Freedman's Bank and Indian Bureau, would altogether sink into insignificance compared with the frauds practiced in the collection of this cotton tax. In the second place, it saves the Government the expense of the commission which is asked by some bills and refers the whole subject of individual claims to such courts as the Legislatures may provide. In the third place, it will defeat the hungry crowd of cormorants known here as claim agents, many of whom undertake to collect claims for one-half and then steal the other. In the fourth place, the rights of the parties will be litigated in the States and in the collection districts where the tax was paid, in easy access of the parties and their witnesses and collectors' books and local counsel, where any and all attempts of fraud can and will be detected and frustrated.

The provisions of this bill are not onerous upon the Government, considering the long use of the money received from this source and the amount of it. There is also a bill before the House proposing to refund it to the States as a school fund. To this proposition I am unqualifiedly opposed, first, because the citizens of the South are now heavily taxed to pay obligations wrongly imposed on them and are taxed heavily for school purposes; second, if this fund is not rightfully the property of the Government, it is the rightful property of the individual who paid it, and it would be violative of every principle of law and justice to give that amount of property belonging to individual citizens to any public use, no matter how worthy the purpose.

No, sir, rather let it remain where it is than direct it to any other purpose than restore it to those from whom it was extorted in the hour of our defenseless condition, and when we had no representatives on this floor.

I ask the attention of the House to the main features of the bill I have introduced, and it will be seen that every provision is made to protect the interest of the Government and secure it to the rightful parties, the true claimants, whether they be the factor, purchaser, or the farmer. The bonds to be issued will be in sums of one hundred, five hundred, and one thousand dollars, fractions under one hundred dollars being paid in currency. These securities will be at par or above par. They will form a foundation for the credit of our people upon which they can realize such amounts as may be required to prosecute their business. This fund will be distributed throughout our whole section and in every locality. The hearts of many colored and white men, alike in their cabins and their poverty, would be gladdened by this act of justice. The old men of my section whose fortunes perished in an hour, worn down with care and oppressed with debts, the young men struggling into life without a dollar, the colored man in the possession of his freedom who felt this tax upon his first efforts to maintain himself, would each and all rejoice at the passage of this bill and feel that justice, though long delayed, had still been done.

Various measures are being urged before Congress for the purpose, or at least with the statement, that their passage will greatly benefit the South. Let me say to all who desire to benefit the South, to aid it in its deep distress and want, that no measure has been or ever will be presented to Congress which will so surely and so greatly benefit all her people. It will restore confidence. It will win back the respect and affection of the people, and disabuse their minds of the thought and feeling that they have been kept in the Union only to feel its power to oppress or to tax them.

The other bill to which I desire to call the attention of the House is No. 233, and it provides for the payment for all cotton seized after the 29th day of May, 1865. On that day the President issued his proclamation, as follows:

> I hereby grant to all persons who have directly and indirectly participated in the existing rebellion, except as hereinafter excepted, amnesty and pardon, with restoration of all rights of property, except as to slaves, &c.

Not to detain the House by specific details as to amounts and dates, I will state that, under various acts of Congress and orders of the Treasury Department, over one hundred and sixty thousand bales of cotton were seized and sold. The amount accounted for to the Treasury as the proceeds of the sales of this cotton was $35,000,000, the charges and expenses, about nine millions, being deducted, left something like twenty-six millions in the Treasury. Two millions or more of this fund was paid out by the Treasurer to fraudulent claimants, who perhaps never owned a bale of cotton. Congress passed a joint resolution on the 30th of March, 1868, requiring all proceeds arising from the sales of captured and abandoned property to be covered into the Treasury.

By the several acts of March 12, 1863, July 2, 1864, and July 27, 1868, jurisdiction was given exclusively to the Court of Claims for this cotton or its proceeds. Suits were instituted for the larger portion of this cotton. Most of these were defeated or dismissed. Judgments have been recovered for a sum less than ten millions, leaving in the Treasury between seventeen and twenty million dollars. The claimant had to prove his loyalty and ownership, and he had to establish his loyalty first, by what was known as the Drake amendment, and was limited to two years. Thus most of the claimants and true owners of this cotton or its proceeds were denied admission to the court.

But the Supreme Court, in the case of United States vs. Padelford, 9 Wallace, 531; Anderson vs. United States, 9 Wallace, 56; United States vs. Klein, 13 Wallace, 128; Planters' Bank vs. Union Bank, 16 Wallace, 496, held that so much of these acts as required the owner to prove his loyalty was unconstitutional and void. The court also held that this fund was held in trust for the true owners of it. Before this decision was made, however, the period of two years allowed these claimants to enter the courts to prove ownership had expired, and thus we see $20,000,000, which was most unjustly seized from our people, in the Treasury of the Government and every effort made to secure its payment to the individual citizen fail. The Supreme Court of the United States has most emphatically declared that this is a trust fund; that the Government so holds it; that the law by which it was withheld was unconstitutional and void; and yet some men who prate so loudly about their constitutional obligations refuse now this act of justice which has been so long delayed. It is yet to be seen how long this trust fund is to remain in the Treasury as an evidence of the wrong and injustice to a portion of the people of this country.

I stated that the amount accounted for by the Treasury agents of the Government was but a small portion of what was realized. In support of this I will state the history of the seizure of one hundred and sixty-two bales of cotton taken from a friend of mine whose farm was in my county and within a few hours' ride of where I lived. The seizure was made in the month of August in the year 1865. The cotton was shipped to Nashville, Tennessee, to Cincinnati, thence to New York, and sold. The market value of that cotton at the time of its seizure was about $63,000, and the owner was paid upon proof of his ownership the sum of $11,268.38 in the month of November, 1873, upon his giving a receipt in full for all charges against the Government. Here was a clear, unqualified steal of over fifty thousand dollars. This act of plunder and robbery forced to bankruptcy one of the most worthy and energetic citizens of my State; and yet when he denounces the thief who robbed him he is called disloyal. And what is true in this case is true, I believe, in every case of seizure. I ask the Clerk to read from a speech I made in the last Congress upon this subject, as I desire the facts and history of some of these transactions to be kept before the public. I shall ask that this table of figures be printed as part of my speech.

The Clerk read as follows:

The following statement of the sales of cotton seized in the southern cities, with the expenses charged and reductions made under various pretexts, exhibits the showing of the Treasury Department, and on its face is specious and plausible. Of the Savannah cotton, sea island, which was worth about $2.50 a pound, was sold at about 80 cents, and upland was sold at about 40 cents, when it ought to have averaged over $1.

A great fraud is concealed in these figures, a fraud which could have been perpetrated only by false samples and other similar dishonest contrivances. That such fraudulent devices were used has long been well known and understood. The history of the commercial world may be searched in vain for any similar frauds on a scale so gigantic and with results so ruinous and unjust to the parties concerned.

Of the cotton sold by Simeon Draper, United States cotton agent, derived from Savannah, there were of sea island 6,531 bales, weighing 2,644,673 pounds, value, currency, $1,657,231.77; charges of transportation, &c., following cotton to sale, $101,958.58; making net value $1,555,273.20; or an average of $238.13 per bale.

From the foregoing proceeds there was subsequently to the sale deducted by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury—

1½ per cent. to cover incidental expenses	$24,858 47
1 per cent. to pay commission to agents	16,572 31
Internal-revenue tax on 2,044,673 pounds	40,893 46
Total	82,324 24

Or $12 61 per bale; leaving as an absolute net balance upon which judgments were paid of but $225 53 per bale.

Of upland from Savannah, 32,827 bales of cotton, 16,034,415 pounds	$6,418,600 36
Charges of transportation, &c., following cotton to sale	512,478 00
Net value of sale	5,906,122 36

Or an average of $179.91 per bale.

Deducted after sale:

1½ per cent. incidental expenses	96,279 00
1 per cent. commission to agents	64,186 00
2 cents per pound revenue tax, 16,034,415 pounds	320,688 30
Total	481,153 30

Or $14.34 per bale; leaving an absolute net amount of $165.57, and which amount has been paid on judgments of the Court of Claims.

Of sales from Charleston, South Carolina:
Sea islands, 1,063 bales, 286,302 pounds	$202,671 24
Charges of transportation following cotton to sale	7,876 83
Making net value	194,794 41

Or an average of $183.25 per bale.

Charges subsequently deducted:

1 per cent. agents' commissions	2,026 71
2 cents internal-revenue tax on 286,302 pounds	5,726 04
Total	10,792 81

Or $10.15 per bale reduction; leaving but $173.10 on which judgments were rendered.

Of upland cotton, Charleston, South Carolina:
3,639 bales, 1,437,118 pounds	$530,421 03
Charges of transportation following cotton to sale	26,964 46
Net of sales	503,456 57

Or an average of $138.36 per bale.

Amounts subsequently deducted:

1 per cent. to pay commissions of agents	5,304 21
2 cents per pound on 1,437,118 pounds by internal-revenue tax	28,742 36
Total	42,002 88

Or $11.54 per bale; leaving $126.82 per bale to satisfy the judgments of the Court of Claims.

Of sales from Mobile, Alabama, derived from seizures by the military forces:
3,220 bales upland cotton, 1,628,873 pounds	$628,645 91
Charges following the cotton to sale	22,319 15
Net of sales	606,326 76

Or $188.31 per bale.

Charges deducted after sale:

1½ per cent. to cover incidental expenses	9,429 67
1 per cent. commission of agents	6,256 45
2 cents per pound on 1,628,873 pounds, internal revenue	32,577 46
Total	48,293 58

Or $14.99 per bale; leaving but $173.32 per bale for any claimant in the court.

Of sales from Mobile, Alabama, derived from the agents of the Treasury:
2,986 bales of cotton, 4,018,689 pounds	$1,461,077 27
Charges following the cotton to sale	111,013 38
Net of sales	1,350,063 89

Or $135.20 per bale.

Charges deducted after sale:

1½ per cent. to cover incidental expenses	$21,916 17
3½ per cent. to commissions of agents	51,137 70
2 cents per pound internal revenue on 4,018,689 pounds	80,373 78

Or $15.36 per bale; leaving but $119.84 upon which judgments are rendered to claimants.

The cottons derived from New Orleans and received at New York were disposed of with the same charges attached. Those sold at New Orleans by the several agents had only the two cents per pound revenue tax deducted, besides the other expenses, and without any percentage for incidental expenses or for the commission of agents.

The average net amount obtained per bale—

By the sales of military	$192 00
By B. F. Flanders, Treasury agent	146 64
By G. H. Burbridge, Treasury agent
By O. N. Cutler, Treasury agent	160 37
The sea-island cotton seized at Savannah, 2,044,673 pounds, was worth, at $2.50 per pound	5,111,682 50
It was reported as sold for	1,657,231 77
Loss unexplained	3,454,550 73
The real value of the upland cotton seized at Savannah, 16,034,415 pounds, was	16,034,415 00
Reported as sold for	6,418,600 36

Similar, or even worse results, will be shown by an investigation of the sales made of the cotton seized in the other southern cities.

Mr. COOK. It will be seen from this table that the sea-island cotton seized in Savannah was 6,531 bales, weighing 2,644,673 pounds. It brought $1,657,231.77. The market value of this sea-island at the time was $5,111,682.50, showing a loss unexplained of $3,354,550.73.

There was upland cotton seized at Savannah, 32,827 bales, weighing 16,034,415 pounds. This was sold for $6,418,600.36. The actual value of this cotton was $16,034,415; it sold for $6,418,600.36; loss unexplained, $9,615,814.64, showing a variance in the amount turned into the Treasury from the cotton seized at the port of Savannah alone of $13,070,365.37.

And the same is true of the seizures and sales at Charleston, Mobile, and New Orleans. I have procured these figures to rebut the unjust charge which is frequently made against the people of the South that they are asserting claims against the Government for losses greater than they sustained. I desire to mention among many whose cotton was seized at Savannah was a colored man who by his honest industry had purchased his freedom, and by his subsequent exertions had purchased a few bales of cotton which were stored in Savannah, where he lived. This cotton was seized and sold, and though he has indorsed upon his paper, in the handwriting of Secretary Stanton, that he satisfied him of his ownership of the cotton and his loyalty, he has never yet been able to realize one dollar even in the house of his friends. This man was also a depositor in that pious and safe institution known as the Freedman's Savings Bank. What he has ever realized from that safe deposit your reports show. If this man in reflecting upon his losses should feel that he had fallen into similar hands with the one who traveled from Jericho to Jerusalem, no one should censure him. I also introduced a bill for his relief, which yet rests quietly in the committee-room.

It is charged against the people of the South that they are asserting claims against the Government for losses never sustained, for pay for their slaves, and even for the assumption of the confederate war debt and for the payment of the bonds of the States issued during the corrupt, arbitrary, and destructive period while they were undergoing reconstruction. I have shown how grossly unjust and false is this charge as to the claims for cotton. However desirable it might be to us, and however just the demand, I know of no one who supposes for one moment that that provision of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution which prohibits the payments for the slaves of the South will ever be repealed or violated for that purpose.

As to the payment for any of these claims as charged against us, no such proposition has ever been made by any democratic legislature or convention or any active assemblage of our people. These debts were founded, many of them, in the grossest fraud, and used in many instances for private purposes and in the procurement of corrupt and infamous legislation, and the assumption of these at any time by this Government would be opposed by every honest man South. No, sir; there are many losses to the South for which no reparation will ever be made or expected; but there are certain acts of this Government since the war deeply affecting the rights and prosperity of our people which this Government can and should, in justice to itself as well as the whole people of this country, at once repeal and modify, and relieve us from their injustice. I allude to the cotton tax and the cotton seizures, and this Government will never place itself rightly before the world until this is done.

If, sir, we sinned in the rebellion, as you call it, grievously have we atoned for it. The marks of the ruin and desolation of your troops as they marched through our country are yet to be seen. In my own State a thousand chimneys to-day point to heaven as mournful monuments of the devastation of war. The old people who had gathered around their hearthstones for generations have perished in their poverty, and their descendants are scattered in destitution throughout the country.

I will notice one other charge which is constantly made through the republican press of the country and even by some members on this floor, which I do not attribute to any improper motive, but simply to their absolute ignorance of the situation of affairs in the South and especially in my own State. I take one extract from a republican paper, because it contrasts my State by name with that of the State of South Carolina. Here is the extract:

South Carolina is the most prosperous of all the Southern States. This is attributable to the fact that the negro has there been protected in all his rights, and, instead of idling away his time, he has been laboring faithfully, and plenty has crowned his labors. In the counties of the mountainous portions of the State, especially in York, Spartanburgh, and Union, the material interests of the people have never been in a more promising condition. Not so, however, across the Savannah River, in the State of Georgia. There the colored man has been hounded down, robbed of his labor and its fruits, and generally so maltreated that he has lost self-respect and has ceased to be industrious. It is stated by those best able to judge that South Carolina was saved from such an appalling consequence by the promptness with which the national arm was there interposed and the unlettered whites taught that the negro had rights that the white man was bound to respect. Too much praise cannot be accorded the pioneers of South Carolina reconstruction for the kindly relations which to-day exist between the races in that State. The two Carolinas present happy fruits of the results of reconstruction.

I am gratified at the prosperous condition of South Carolina as portrayed above, but I had been induced to doubt that such was the condition of that State. I am glad to have republican authority for the statement that "kindly relations exist there to-day between the races."

But I ask the attention of the House to another republican statement as to the condition of South Carolina, and leave it for gentlemen on the other side to console themselves as best they can with the picture drawn of the condition of that State by a republican judge, and as to the cause of it.

Hear the extract:

HARD TIMES IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

[From the Charleston News.]

The judge of the court of common pleas at Barnwell, South Carolina, had to bring business to a sudden halt last week to save colored jurors from starvation. They said they had been without food for the whole day, and could get neither money nor credit. The kind-hearted judge proceeded to give them the following "crumbs of comfort:"

"Under the circumstances I will be compelled to discharge you, for I cannot keep you here in a starving condition. But you see to what a condition you have brought the country. You are not without blame, for the men in office, responsible for the stoppage of the court, were put there by your votes. Here we are in the month of May; there is no money to pay your judge, to pay jurors, to support the prisoners in jail, or pay the other expenses of the county. You colored voters are responsible for this thing, for by your votes the bad men who have brought about this lamentable state of affairs were elected."

This is the condition of republican South Carolina, "where the negro has been protected in all his rights," "where he has labored faithfully and plenty has crowned his labors," where the "most kindly relations exist to-day between the races." "Happy and prosperous" South Carolina! Happy and prosperous only in her degradation and desolation.

In alluding to my State, Georgia, the article referred to says the colored man has been hounded down, robbed of his labor and its fruits, and generally so maltreated that he has lost self-respect and has ceased to be industrious. A more untrue representation of the condition of the colored people of my State was never contained in as many lines. I say that the most friendly and even kindly relations exist to-day throughout my entire State between the races. The colored people are regarded by us as the very best class of laborers we can get. They are employed in our homes, our hotels, on our farms and public works at remunerative wages, and I assert are as promptly and faithfully paid as any class of laborers throughout this country.

But, sir, the contradiction of that statement does not depend alone upon my denial. I will read from the last report of the comptroller-general made for the year ending December 31, 1875. This shows the colored polls to be 87,569; an increase of 3,349 since the year 1874. The colored people own 396,658 acres of land, valued by themselves at $1,263,902; city and town property valued at $1,203,202; money and solvent debts, $102,194; aggregate of all property owned by them, including household and kitchen furniture and farm implements, $5,393,885, and they pay a tax upon this property of $26,969.42. This, sir, is the official statement of the condition of the "colored man" in Georgia, who is "hounded down," "robbed of his labor and its fruits," "and generally so maltreated that he has lost self-respect," "and has ceased to be industrious" Sir, no one will be more astonished at the sad picture drawn of the condition of the colored man in Georgia than the worthy and industrious owners of this five millions of property.

I regret to say that the colored man of my State has been robbed and shamefully treated; but I deny most emphatically that it has ever been done by the white people of the State. It has been done by that most infamous concern known as the Freedman's Bureau, and subsequently by that grander and yet more infamous swindle, the Freedman's Bank. The colored people of Georgia had $361,000 in that bank, of which they have been robbed; and but one man has ever been tried or convicted for the frauds perpetrated by that bank and its officers, and that was in my State. I allude to one Corie, the treasurer of the branch of that bank in Atlanta, Georgia. He was educated in the Freedman's Bureau, and when that perished from its own rottenness and corruption he was left in Georgia as a missionary; and when the branch of the Freedman's Bank was established at Atlanta, being a Christian gentleman and loyal to the last degree, he was transferred from the field of his missionary labors to the cashiership of that bank. He admitted his defalcations to the amount of $8,000, and how much more could not be ascertained either from Corie himself or his books. I have yet to see the first republican paper that has ever denounced this great plunder of the colored people of the South or publish the facts connected with it.

In another extract from the same paper, dated March 25, the following statement was made:

KU-KLUX AT WORK AGAIN.

Private letters received from Georgia convey the startling intelligence that Ku-Klux organizations in that State have again commenced to practice their deeds of blood. In the county of Columbia two negroes were killed last week, and over a dozen were taken from their homes and severely whipped, four of the number having been tortured by having hot sealing-wax dropped upon their naked bodies. In the counties of Burke, Jefferson, and Chatham similar outrages have been perpetrated in the past fifteen days, and in the vicinity of Macon three negroes were found hanging to trees in the neighborhood of a leading democrat. These inhumanities were evidently impelled by the recent democratic defeat in New Hampshire. Somebody in Georgia must receive the vials of wrath, and they are poured out upon the heads of inoffensive colored men and women, whose only crimes are that they belong to a despised race and are republicans. Hundreds of negroes are annually offered up as sacrifices to democratic hate in God-forsaken Georgia, and yet only a few of the instances are known, as democratic newspapers are careful not to give publicity to such facts, and the two or three republican papers there seem to be afraid to allude to them. History presents no instances where the peasantry of a country were ever subjected to such inhumanities as are the negroes of the South, especially in Georgia. Robbed of their labor and all its fruits, they drag out a wretched existence, and in many instances it is a real relief when these victims are taken from their homes by painted ruffians and put to death.

The utter falsehood of the above statement is known to every man in my State, where these crimes are alleged to have taken place, and the paper which gave circulation to the above had the cleverness a few days afterward to correct the evil as far as it could by stating it had been deceived. But when such a statement starts on its errand who can estimate its mischief, no matter how soon contradicted? But to show what actually did take place in the city of Macon, Georgia, where some of these alleged outrages are said to have taken place, I will read from the daily paper published in that city—and this about the very time that said outrages were charged to have been perpetrated:

THE FUNERAL OF CHARLIE CRAFT.

The colored Presbyterian church on Washington avenue was crowded on yesterday afternoon by a sympathizing assembly, to perform the obsequies and render the last sad tribute of respect to the memory of this worthy man and good citizen.

Quite a number of our best citizens, ladies and gentlemen, exhibited by their presence an appreciation of the worth of the deceased and sympathy with the bereaved. It was an interesting spectacle to witness the widow, through the whole solemn exercises, resting upon the arm of one whom she nursed in infancy as her "young marster," and the entire family following as mourners. The colored Mason lodge and the Lincoln Guards, of both of which he was a member, were in the procession with full ranks.

The scene was one that would have surprised if not startled the people at the North, who have been educated into the belief that the people of the South treat the negro with the utmost inhumanity and disrespect. Charlie Craft, though a colored man, was recognized and respected as a good citizen, and as such a fitting tribute was paid to his memory by those who knew and esteemed him.

Such was the tribute paid to a worthy colored man in a southern city distinguished for the refinement and intelligence of its citizens. And I hesitate not to say, from an extensive acquaintance with the citizens of that city and the county in which it is located, that no people in this whole land would more universally condemn or promptly punish the perpetrators of all such crimes as are charged against them.

We hear continued boasts of what the republican party has accomplished. What, sir, is the known history of that party? A Vice-President has been driven in disgrace from the high position he held in his party and before the country covered with crimes of the grossest and most infamous character. A Cabinet officer has resigned his position under charges which involve his character and integrity as a man and official. Our foreign minister to one of the most important courts of the world was forced by the indignant sentiment of a great nation to retire from the post of his duty, and his conduct receives the universal censure and condemnation of his own country. The private secretary of your President stands to-day indicted before the criminal courts of your country for crimes of the gravest character. We have seen members expelled from their seats on this floor for their connection with legislation in favor of corporations which has imposed a liability of one hundred and fifty or eighty millions of dollars upon the toiling industry of this country, thus showing that when Oaks Ames said he had put his "money where it would do the most good" he knew full well what he was doing. The chief clerk of your Treasury, the confidential and trusted friend of the Secretary himself, has been transferred from his Bureau in that Department to the State prison. The editor in chief and owner, I believe, of the leading western republican organ, whose wealth is estimated at half a million of dollars, has been convicted of crimes against your revenues and has been transferred from the editorial tripod to the quiet cell of a prison. He was one of those who prated loudest of his loyalty and denounced rebels with the greatest vehemence. The soldier in the field has been plundered of his pittance by the sale of post-traderships established alone for his benefit and convenience. The wounded soldier, the widow and the orphan, the objects of the bounty of the Government, have been robbed through your Pension Bureau, and been compelled to pay tribute to these official plunderers. The freedman has been plundered of his hard earnings to the extent of millions by an organized band of plunderers under the very shadow of the White House. The Indian is robbed of 75 per cent. of the amount appropriated to discharge the obligations of the Government to him and to supply his wants. The appropriations made for the erection of monuments and head-stones to perpetuate the memory of the brave men who defended your Government, and to show the affection and gratitude of the nation, were even made a source of official speculation and corruption.

When these locusts of republicanism, like the locust of Kansas or Egypt, had swept everything before them in the South, they then turned upon the Government which had kept them in power and place and plundered its Treasury in open day and almost in the very presence of the Treasurer himself. Thus the Government itself, the negro and the Indian, the widow and the orphan, the living soldier and the dead, each and all paid tribute to this spirit of loyalty and rascality.

The resolutions of the Cincinnati convention congratulate the people upon the prosperity of the country. But what is the statement made upon this floor by gentlemen from every section, and representing every interest? The ironmongers inform us that the fires of their furnaces have ceased to burn; the machinery of their workshops is idle and unemployed; the busy hum of the spindle and the loom is no longer heard; your shipping lies idle, and universal prostration prevails throughout the entire business interest of the country. The failures of the oldest and best business houses, the savings-banks, the various corporations, and the largest individual capitalists of the country are daily announced. The honest laborer in many sections, without labor or bread, has become the tramp, spreading terror and dismay among the people in many sections.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] a few days since stated that the homes of the laboring people were being sold at every sale-day by the sheriff, and this in his city where Congress voted to expend one and a half millions of dollars a few months since, and yet he adheres to the party and the policy which have brought all these evils upon the country. Like Ephraim of old, he is joined to his idols; no argument or appeal from this side the House, not even the cries of the laboring masses about him, nor the sad reality which he states, that day after day their homes are passing from their possession under the sheriff's hammer, can induce him to change the folly of his life, which has contributed so much to this universal ruin and distress in every interest and section of our common country.

The republican party has made its nomination and the people of the country are challenged to its support. I ask attention to an editorial in the leading republican paper of this city and, I believe, the national organ of the party:

> The nomination of a milk-and-water republican at Cincinnati, one who will allow his antechamber to be filled with rebels and carry out their behests, will greatly dispirit southern republicans and cause many of them to regret that they ever allied themselves to the party.

The very cordial indorsement given the nominee of the party by that paper I must regard as assuring the country that the nominee is no "milk-and-water republican," and that "rebels will not be permitted to enter his antechamber."

We are thus put upon notice that the eight or ten millions of intelligent people of the South, who own the property in great part and pay the taxes for the support of the Government, are to be denied by that administration, if elected, any rights in the Government, even the poor privilege of being admitted to the antechamber of this President.

This, sir, is the candidate of a party of a section of the country, who is to deny admission to his very presence of millions of the people of his country, no matter what may be their rights or their interest.

Sir, I think the time has come in the hour of our national disgrace and the universal distress and gloom which overspread our whole land, when the good people of this great nation should rise up to the importance of the occasion and elect a man to that great office who will be the President not of a party, not of a section, but President in deed and in truth of the whole country, and of every interest, and of every section of it. A President whose antechamber will be open alike to all, the humblest and poorest as well as the proudest; when bitter and malignant party zeal will not alone be a passport to admission, but whose antechamber will be open to every decent citizen of this country who desires to call. When, sir, we shall be able to put such a man in the presidential chair we shall then have peace, that peace which flows from a just government honestly administered, that peace which springs from the heart of a prosperous, happy, and united people, and not that peace which the republican party has brought to the country, which, like the peace of the Scriptures, "passeth all understanding."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration, known as the "sundry civil bill," appropriates $14,636,000, about $12,000,000 less than was appropriated last year, for the current year. This bill is one of a kind in which the appropriations rest very largely upon the discretion of Congress. It is the bill of all others upon which a large reduction can very properly be made. In many of the reductions made here—I may say in most of them—I have concurred. For some matters embraced in the bill the appropriations are, in my judgment, too small; but, upon the whole, most of the reductions here proposed can properly be made.

I would have done otherwise in reference to the public buildings of the country. I would not appropriate money to buildings not already commenced; but as to those now in progress I would have been more liberal than the committee has been, for the reason that there never was a time in the history of the country when these buildings could have been completed so cheaply as now, and besides that, it would be a godsend to the labor of the country to have this employment.

Let me analyze the bill for a moment only. For public printing about $1,100,000 is appropriated. There was appropriated for this purpose last year, I believe, $1,600,000. The amount named in the bill has been recommended by the Committee on Printing and is, I presume, based upon the estimate of Mr. Rives, of this city. Whether it is enough or not, I am not prepared to say, but the minority of the Committee on Printing is of opinion that it is not enough. For the judiciary two and one-half million dollars are appropriated. The able head of that Department says to the committee that this is not a sufficient amount, that $3,000,000 is absolutely necessary.

For the District of Columbia no appropriation is made. They are totally without funds and no means to get any as yet. The tax bill reported by this House has not yet passed the Senate. It is probable that no tax bill will pass.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman must not inferentially attribute any blame to the Committee on Appropriations on that score.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not doing so. I am merely stating what is the fact. In my judgment, after looking at this matter of the District of Columbia, I think the committee ought to appropriate $600,000 for the District of Columbia. For their 3.65 bond interest, for which the Government is holden and for which the faith of the nation is pledged, no appropriation has been made. There is an appropriation in the bill directing payment out of the revenues of this District, but there are no revenues.

Mr. RANDALL. I might as well state the fact here that there will be an amendment offered providing if those revenues are not sufficient the Government shall advance the amount necessary, so that in this bill we shall make sure there shall be no default in the payment of interest on the 3.65 bonds during the next fiscal year.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand the committee will propose an amendment of that sort?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all right. Still the District will be without money. We have been appropriating year after year more or less for the support of the District, and probably it will be done this time if the District government is to be maintained.

On the question of the public lands very great reduction has been made. The whole subject has been turned over to my very generous friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] who has very carefully examined it, and he makes a reduction of $900,000. I am not prepared to say whether the service will stand that reduction or not. I do not know whether the judgment of gentlemen better informed than I am was taken.

I rose principally to say, Mr. Chairman, this was a bill in reference to the provisions of which discretion very largely entered, and that I favored most of the reductions which have been made. I believe this is a time in the history of the country when we should prune the bill to the fullest extent possible. I agreed to most of what has been done. I now yield for thirty minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HENDERSON.]

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the committee for a short time while I call attention to a subject in which the people of my district, and especially those residing in the western part of it, feel a deep interest. I allude to the subject of completing the Rock Island armory and arsenal, a national work now being constructed on Rock Island, in the State of Illinois.

But, Mr. Chairman, while the people whom I have the honor to represent on this floor and the people of Iowa on the other side of the river feel a strong local pride and interest in the completion of this armory and arsenal, yet it is a work in which the people in all sections of the country should feel an interest. It is a national work, intended for national defense, and, in my judgment, it would be most unwise to neglect it or to stop short of its entire completion. It is for the purpose of attempting to show this fact that I now ask the attention of the committee.

Although, Mr. Chairman, the people of the United States are now at peace with themselves and at peace with all the world, yet the subject of our national defenses is one of great interest to all our people, and one which cannot be neglected without endangering the national peace and the national safety. "In time of peace prepare for war" is a political axiom which has been approved by the universal sense of mankind in all ages of the world, and is no less true to-day than when it was first uttered centuries ago. In fact, with all the improved appliances and enginery of modern warfare it has only become more important that we should heed this great lesson taught us by the wisdom of the past and be reasonably prepared at all times for war. This, Mr. Chairman, is necessary, in the first place, as a means of preserving the national peace, and, in the second place, if war comes, as war may come, it is necessary to preserve the national honor, if not the national existence.

It will not do to say that we will not go on with necessary works of national defense, like the construction of this arsenal, because we are now at peace. Such national defenses as the Rock Island armory and arsenal is designed to be cannot be built in time of war, or, if they can, they cannot be so well, so thoroughly, and so economically constructed as in time of peace. Nor will it do, Mr. Chairman, to say, because we are now at peace, that therefore we are not going to have any more war. I believe in peace with all my heart, and it is to be most earnestly desired that we shall as a people and as a nation remain at peace; that we shall have no more war. But who can assure us that we shall remain at peace? Human nature is the same it has ever been. The passions of men, the pride as well as the selfishness of individuals and of nations, remain unchanged. And no people on the earth can claim an absolute exemption from war.

Wars come, Mr. Chairman, as the storms sometimes come, suddenly and unexpectedly. The cloud, when first seen, may not be bigger than a man's hand; and yet very soon the storm bursts with fury upon the land. And so from very slight and unexpected causes wars come and drench nations in blood. Who, sir, in 1860, when we were holding a peaceful election to determine who should be the Chief Magistrate of the United States for four years, believed that in 1861 the storm of war would in so short a time burst upon our land, to continue for four years, with all its terrible desolation and destruction? No man, I think, in 1860 fully realized or believed so great a calamity could come upon our country as did in 1861; and, if we then could have had such an armory and arsenal as this at Rock Island is intended to be, it can be safely said that it would more than have paid for itself every year of the war. Besides, our soldiers would have been well and promptly armed, the war would have been shortened in its duration, blood and treasure would have been saved, and much of the national demoralization would have been averted. And I say here to-day, Mr. Chairman, and I wish every member to hear what I say, that, if we ever have another war and have not the means of speedily arming a requisite number of soldiers with the very best arm in use, whether the number be large or small, it will be a disgrace to our people and to our country. And our public men and our statesmen, whose duty it is to provide for the national defense and to see and know that it is complete and adequate, will be justly condemned, by not only our own people, but by all the world.

I remember, Mr. Chairman, in the spring of 1861, when war seemed inevitable, and when, in fact, the war cloud was then throwing its dark shadows over the land, a distinguished statesman of Illinois, whose name is dear to the American people—I allude to Stephen A. Douglas—uttered these memorable words:

> The shortest road to peace is the most stupendous preparation for war.

And I say, sir, that the surest way to preserve the peace of this or any other country is to be well and thoroughly prepared for war.

Mr. Chairman, one of the very objects had in view by our fathers in the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, as expressed in the preamble, was to provide for the common defense; and, as if to show its importance, the power to make this provision was among the first conferred upon Congress by the Constitution. It is found in the very first clause of the section of the Constitution defining the powers of Congress; and where a power is conferred upon Congress to perform a necessary act, it imposes a duty to do it, and there is no higher duty devolving upon Congress than that of providing for the common defense of the country.

But I presume, Mr. Chairman, no one will deny the necessity of providing for the national defense; and if we are to have any national defense at all, then nothing is more important in providing for it than our arsenals; not arsenals for the storage and repair of arms merely, but for their construction as well.

The necessity for arsenals for the construction of arms, and of all that a soldier fights with, was felt and sorely felt at the very beginning of the late war and all through it. But very few of our soldiers went into the field in the late war with a serviceable arm. I remember well that regiments were supplied with old Harper's Ferry muskets and with Austrian and Belgian muskets; arms that the men had no confidence in; and in many instances it was a year or more before a better arm was furnished. And this, so far as new regiments were concerned, continued throughout the war.

The Government purchased during the late war, as I have seen it stated, about three-quarters of a million muskets, at a cost of about $15,000,000. It is said these muskets were worth as a merchantable article from seventy cents to $5 each, or say $2,000,000; so that, in the purchase of these arms, there must have been a loss to the Government of about $13,000,000, besides the much greater loss of having our soldiers armed with an inferior arm. If we had had such an arsenal as this at Rock Island will be when finished, as it is I think the highest duty of the Government to finish it, we could have armed a million of men with the very best arm in use. And it can be demonstrated that the difference in cost of material alone would have more than paid for this arsenal every year of the war.

It was the necessities of the Government during the late war, Mr. Chairman, the impossibility of getting serviceable arms in sufficient quantities to meet the demands of the service, and the great expense to the Government of purchasing even inferior arms, which suggested the building of this armory and arsenal at Rock Island, in the State of Illinois.

I do not intend, Mr. Chairman, to enter into any extended argument, at this time, to show the great importance, if not the absolute necessity, of the Government being prepared at all times to manufacture arms, and all the material of war to supply our armies, in Government shops. We were taught that by the bitter and costly experience of the late war. No Government should be at the mercy of foreign nations or of home contractors in the matter of supplying its armies with arms and munitions of war, because it is more expensive, and because it may absolutely endanger the national safety. It is by far the wiser and more economical policy to be prepared at all times to manufacture for our soldiers the very best arms in use at the time it is needed. With the improvements being constantly made in all that pertains to war, what may be regarded as a good arm to-day may prove to be a very inferior one in a short time; and it is due to the brave men of our country, whenever called upon to fight its battles, that they should be furnished with the very best arm in use. This is also true economy in every way in which it may be viewed.

Mr. Chairman, it has not been the policy of our country to maintain a large standing army. We have relied upon our militia and upon volunteers for national defense; and it is to arm and equip these in the great Mississippi Valley that this arsenal is being constructed, in case of war with our own people or with foreign nations. I say Mississippi Valley, Mr. Chairman, because it was the intention of Congress and of the Ordnance Department that this arsenal should be made the great arsenal of construction and deposit for the Mississippi Valley. To show that that is so, I read the following extract from the report of the Chief of Ordnance, October 19, 1869:

> Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, is eminently suitable for the principal arsenal of construction and deposit for the Mississippi Valley, and the Government owns all the land that is required for a first-class armory and arsenal. The arsenal at that point is being built upon a scale commensurate with its great importance.

For the same purpose and also to show more fully the opinion of the then Chief of Ordnance, General Dyer, as to its location and value to the Government, I read the following extract from his report of October 24, 1871:

> The construction of the Rock Island arsenal has been carried on as rapidly as the liberal appropriations made by Congress would allow. Two of the workshops are nearly completed, and will very shortly be occupied, one as a store-house and the other in place of the temporary workshops, which are to be removed. The act of Congress of April, 1864, authorized and empowered the Secretary of War to take possession of the whole of the island of Rock Island, and directed him to build thereon and maintain an arsenal for the construction, deposit, and repair of arms and munitions of war. It seems manifest that Congress intended that this arsenal should be made the great arsenal of deposit and construction for the Mississippi Valley, and that it should possess the manufacturing capacities of the national armory at Springfield, Massachusetts, and of one of our largest arsenals of construction, and it was planned with that end in view and has been so built. Its location is most admirable and its importance and value to the Government, especially in time of war, will be very great, almost incalculably so. A recent inspection of this arsenal has shown me that the work is being economically, rapidly, and well done. I hope that the appropriations asked for the next fiscal year will be granted by Congress.

It is not necessary for me to attempt to give the history of this arsenal, but I will say that it originated during the late war, and when Congress and the whole country could realize the necessity for it. Congress in 1862, by an act approved July 11, 1862, established three arsenals—one at Columbus, Ohio, one at Indianapolis, Indiana, and the other at Rock Island, Illinois—and appropriated $100,000 for each of said arsenals. And I understand we are largely indebted for the act establishing the arsenal at Rock Island to Hon. S. S. Cox, Speaker pro tempore of the House. I with pleasure give him the credit to which he is entitled. In 1864 Congress passed an act authorizing and empowering the Secretary of War to take and hold full and complete possession of all the lands and shores of the island of Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, on behalf of the United States, and to hold the same when taken as a military reservation by the War Department, upon which to build and maintain an arsenal for the construction, deposit, and repair of arms and munitions of war.

Under these two acts of Congress, and another approved June 27, 1866, the Rock Island armory and arsenal was planned, and the work of building it was commenced. It is now in process of completion. More than two-thirds of the work has already been done, and more than two-thirds of the expense has already been incurred, necessary to complete this great national work and give to the country a first-class arsenal—amply sufficient to supply the wants of the Mississippi Valley in which it is located. And the question is, Mr. Chairman, Shall this great work, so wisely begun, so indispensable to the national peace, and in case of war, to the national safety, go on to completion, or shall it be crippled now, and finally be abandoned in a half-finished condition? I hope not; and yet unless the Committee on Appropriations can be induced to make a larger appropriation than that provided in this bill, now under consideration, or unless the House can be induced to do so, the work will practically come to a stand-still in a very short time, and certainly at the end of this year; and then, Mr. Chairman, if the work is ever resumed again, it will be at very great loss to the Government. A moment's reflection must convince any one of that. If this arsenal is to be completed, there are many reasons why it should not be interrupted now, why the work should go on to completion.

The Committee on Appropriations refused to allow any appropriation for "shop G," as it is called, it being an iron working and finishing shop; and the reason given is that it is a new shop, and they will not allow anything for new work. Now I have urged before the Committee on Appropriations, and I urge again here before this Committee of the Whole House, that while shop G, this iron working and finishing shop, is a new shop, yet it is not in a proper sense new work. This shop is a part of the original plan designed for the armory and arsenal, and it must be built before the arsenal is completed.

The original plan of the arsenal contemplates the building of ten shops, each being intended for a particular use, and all necessary to a complete arsenal. Six of these shops are now either completed or in process of completion, and all must be constructed before the arsenal is finished. To be more explicit, each of these shops is a part of a well-designed system of shops, and all necessary to make a complete armory and arsenal such as we should have in the great Mississippi Valley.

It can be said with as much propriety that a man is a perfect man without an arm or without a leg as to say that this arsenal is a complete arsenal with any of these shops unfinished. To leave any of these shops unfinished, to use a borrowed but very forcible illustration, is like building a two-horse wagon and hitching but one horse to it. And instead of having a great armory and arsenal, one that the country can safely rely upon in the future as a necessary, permanent, national defense, we have an incomplete, unfinished arsenal, one that in case the necessity should arise for it would be a reproach to us and to all our statesmen whose duty it is under the Constitution to provide for the national defense.

If an appropriation for shop G is not made for the next fiscal year, we are told by the very able and intelligent officer who has the immediate charge of this work that the work of building the arsenal will come nearly, if not quite, to a stand-still at the close of this year. And in that event a large number of mechanics, artisans, and laborers must be discharged and turned out of employment.

The number is as follows:

Stone-cutters and helpers	130
Stone-masons and helpers	75
Machinists, smiths, founderymen, and helpers, (all iron-workers)	125
Carpenters, painters, and helpers	130
Other workmen of various kinds, experts, including masters, foremen, &c.	50
Laborers, &c., say	350

This force is, of course, reduced when outdoor work stops in winter, and may be increased in hurried times in summer. But this is about the regular force of mechanics and laborers who would be turned out of employment if the work should be abandoned. And this is a carefully selected and well-organized force, the result of education and experience, extending through many years; and if broken up, it could not be readily replaced, as will be seen, and then at great loss to the Government in the future prosecution of the work.

Another reason why the work should go on is, that on account of the reduction in labor and material it can be carried on at greatly reduced cost. A building can be erected now for about $448,000 that at old rates cost about $620,000. This is owing largely to the reduced cost of iron and to the improved system of carrying on the work inaugurated by Colonel Flagler, who is in command at the arsenal and has charge of the work.

But there is economy in commencing shop G and in going on with the work of completing the arsenal, even if the cost of labor and material should remain the same. The large excavation required for this shop is now much needed for filling low grounds at site of other shops. Then the machinery and tools are there already for use, as well as the necessary force of experienced, skillful workmen, masters and foremen, mechanics, artisans, and laborers. Again, the construction of different buildings at the same time places the work in such condition that a fair amount of each kind of work, laborer's work, masonry, iron work, and carpenter's work will come in each year, and will prevent loss by stopping one kind of work and pressing too much of another kind into one year. While some are excavating, others are engaged in preparing stone and building walls. While some are engaged in roofing, others are at work interarching and flooring. And thus the work goes on in harmony, and at much less expense in constructing two or more buildings at the same time than it would be in constructing only one.

This system is undoubtedly the true one when more than one building is to be constructed, because it is the most economical. And if it is not pursued, one kind of work will fail entirely in one year and there will be too much of it in another, and it will cause the discharge of many valuable workmen at times for a whole year and the breaking up of a carefully organized force.

But, Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations have not only refused to make any appropriation for shop G, because they consider it new work, but they have only appropriated $80,000 for shop F, a shop in process of construction, when the estimates, both original and revised, ask for $170,000 to complete that shop. And if no new shop is to be commenced, there is a much stronger necessity for making the full appropriation asked for to complete shop F. Every interest in the way of economy demands that it should be made. To stop the work before the completion of shop F, to discharge the workmen employed, and let all the tools and machinery now employed lie idle would be most unwise; and I hope the committee will reconsider their action so far as the estimate for shop F is concerned at least, and allow the full amount asked for to complete it.

But again, Mr. Chairman, in the original estimates submitted by the War Department there was estimated for the water-power connected with the arsenal $60,000. After this estimate had been submitted a more careful survey of the river was made, and it was found that to complete the development of water-power at the arsenal and carry out existing contracts made in good faith by the Government with the Moline Water-Power Company, it would require $157,350 instead of $60,000 as originally asked for. A report to that effect was made by Colonel Flagler to the Chief of Ordnance in February last, and was transmitted by that officer, with a letter recommending that the appropriation be made, to General Belknap, then Secretary of War. And he submitted the report and letter of the Chief of Ordnance to the House of Representatives, accompanied by a letter from himself under date of February 19, 1876, recommending also that the appropriation asked for should be made. These documents were referred by the Speaker to the Committee on Commerce; and at my request they were reported back and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, that committee being, as I supposed, the appropriate committee to consider the subject. The subject was considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, and upon their own investigation and examination they referred the matter to the Committee on Appropriations, and recommended that the sum of $157,350 be appropriated, as asked for by the commandant of the Rock Island arsenal, and recommended by the Chief of Ordnance and the Secretary of War.

I may say further, Mr. Chairman, that after Hon. Alphonzo Taft was appointed Secretary of War, and he was requested to revise the estimates, his attention was called to this subject by myself, and the documents before referred to were submitted to him; and after examining the subject in connection with the Chief of Ordnance, General Benét addressed a letter to Judge Taft, explaining about this special appropriation, and recommending again that it be made; and that letter and recommendation of the Chief of Ordnance was approved by Secretary Taft and submitted by him to the Committee on Appropriations; and I know, Mr. Chairman, that Judge Taft approved the recommendation of General Benét after he had examined the subject, and not until he had done so. And I say here, as a member of this honorable body, after a personal examination of the condition of the water-power connected with the arsenal, and after a careful examination of the contracts and agreements made with the Moline Water-Power Company, that if good faith and honest, fair dealing ever required an appropriation to be made, they require that this appropriation shall be made to develop the water-power and to remove the deposits which have obstructed the flow of water into the pool, so much so as almost to destroy the water-power at low water, and very seriously to damage the Moline Water-Power Company.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not read all of the documents—the report of Colonel Flagler and the letters of General Benét, the letter of General Belknap, and approval of Secretary Taft on the last letter of General Benét—but only some parts of them. But I ask that they may be printed and form a part of my remarks.

And at the proper time, Mr. Chairman, I shall move to amend this bill, first, to make an appropriation to commence shop G; second, to increase the amount to complete shop F from $80,000 to $170,000 asked for for that purpose; and, third, to appropriate the sum of $157,350 to complete the development and maintenance of the water-power.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I will not trespass upon the time and patience of the committee much longer. I believe it the part of wisdom and prudence to go on and complete this armory and arsenal as it was originally intended to be. As I have already said, two-thirds of the expense has already been incurred, and two-thirds of the work is done. If we stop now, it is safe to say we will have only about half the capacity we shall have by expending the other third and finishing the arsenal according to the original plan. And when finished, it is a work worthy of the great Mississippi Valley in which it is located and of the nation. It is not a temporary work, built to-day to molder away to-morrow. It is intended to be permanent, lasting; as permanent and enduring as the firm foundations of this great Capitol. It is located in one of the great States of the Northwest, the future seat of empire, and of the Union, and it is the only national work of any importance in the Northwest.

Mr. Chairman, while the Committee on Appropriations have been, as I think, illiberal with us in the appropriations for this national work, the only one in Illinois, Illinois pays into the Treasury of the United States a large part of the internal revenue of the country. I am not certain as to the amount, but think the State pays at least one-seventh of the entire internal revenue of the United States. Why, Mr. Chairman, the collection district in which I live has paid into the Treasury of the United States in any single month of the last fiscal year more than four times as much revenue as the Committee on Appropriations have allowed for this great national arsenal. In the last month, the month of May, sir, the collection district in which I live, paid into the Treasury of the United States $736,608.56, and for the eleven completed months of the present fiscal year that single district has paid into the national Treasury $7,292,802.87, to say nothing of what the rest of the State has paid, and that is more than three times sufficient to complete this arsenal and make it all it is required to be for a century to come.

Illinois, Mr. Chairman, is one of the great States of this proud Republic. Its wealth, its population, its geographical position, and, above all, its patriotism, its proud devotion to the American Union and to the flag of our country, the emblems of our hopes and our liberties, make it a most suitable State in which to locate this great arsenal; and Rock Island is the most desirable location in the State whereon to build it. The island is one of the noblest of the islands of the Mississippi River. It contains about nine or ten hundred acres of beautiful land, lying high above low-water mark; and it is founded on a rock, as its name indicates. The Government owns every foot of it. It is not only on the great Father of Waters, the noblest river of our country, but it is on one of the great lines of railway communication leading from the East to the West. It is in the immediate neighborhood of inexhaustible coal-fields; it has an ample water-power owned by the Government. It is surrounded by one of the richest agricultural districts in the country and by three enterprising, prosperous, and beautiful cities, containing an aggregate population of perhaps not less than fifty thousand inhabitants; and it is in the valley of the Mississippi, one of the grandest valleys in the world. There is certainly no better location for a great arsenal in any part of our country.

And now, Mr. Chairman, allow me in conclusion to say that I hope we shall not be so unwise as to permit this great work, so essential in providing for the national defense, to be crippled and left in an unfinished condition. On the contrary, let us go on and with reasonable appropriations prosecute the work to completion. When completed it will be an arsenal that the nation will be proud of. It will be a silent, lasting, ever-present, and ever-ready power for peace, and in time of war, if war shall come, for national defense and national preservation.

[The following are the documents referred to by Mr. HENDERSON in his speech:]

A.

ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL, ILLINOIS,
February 4, 1876.

SIR: Referring to my letter to you dated May 6, 1875, respecting the deposits at the head of the water-power pool at this arsenal, the difficulty in getting a sufficient supply of water into the pool, complaints of the Moline Water-Power Company, &c., and to the item of $60,000 in my annual estimate for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, for prosecuting the development of the water-power by making provision to admit the necessary amount of water into the pool, I have the honor to submit for your information and consideration the following calculations and remarks:

Estimate of amount of water required for the water-power for which a water-way into the pool should be provided.

Provision should be made to furnish to the United States at least two thousand horse-power. The best plant of water-wheels, penstocks, and machinery cannot utilize more than 78 per cent. of the power of the water. At low water the head at the dam is seven feet. This would require for the use of the arsenal 3,234 cubic feet of water per second:

$$\frac{2000 \times 550}{0.78 \times 62.3 \times 7} = 3234$$

The contract made with the Moline Water-Power Company requires that one-third as much more be provided for the use of that company. This makes the total amount required 4,312 cubic feet per second. I think it best to put this amount at 4,400.

It is the object of this paper to determine the best method of getting this amount of water; that is, of getting it from the river into the pool. As explained in my letter of May 6, 1875, the water cannot get into the pool now because of obstructing rocks and deposits of mud and sand. The removal of these deposits would be very expensive, is nearly impracticable, and would not be effectual in producing much lasting good.

It is, therefore, necessary to provide some other way.

Whatever plan is adopted, it should possess as many of the following requisites of a good plan as is practicable:

First. It should be as economical as may be.

Second. It should be effectual.

Third. It should be such as will prevent future deposits of sand and mud, or such as will admit of the easiest and most economical removal of these deposits, which, unless prevented, must continue forever.

Fourth. The development of this part of the water-power must be such as not to prevent a future increase of the water-power, but should be such as to make such an increase as easy and economical as may be.

The future manufacturing interests of this community and the probable future wants of this great arsenal make attention to this last requisite important.

After discussing the only two plans of development that are proposed, and making calculations and estimates for them, it will be well to see how far each fulfills the above requirements.

First plan, or that of building a long wing-dam up the river.

You are aware that the president and members of the Moline Water-Power Company have advocated the building of a long wing-dam up the river. The proposed location of this dam is shown by a red line on the accompanying map, (marked A.)

It is claimed for this plan that by running the head of the dam into deep water, it will give so large a cross-section at the head of the pool (A B on map) that enough water will always enter the pool and that also this dam will raise the water in the pool nearly to the height of the river at the head of the dam. The level of the river at the proposed head of the dam (A B on the map) is 1.6 feet higher than at the present head of the pool, (C D on the map.) It is further claimed that this increased height would carry the water over the obstructions which are now at the head of the pool, thus remedying the present evil, besides giving an increased head and a large increase of power at the water-power dams.

I have been unwilling to adopt this plan until after a thorough examination and study of this part of the river could be had.

It will be readily understood that this plan, instead of making a pool all the way to the head of the proposed wing-dam, would substantially make a canal between the wing-dam and the Illinois shore, down which all the water for the water-power would have to be brought. This canal would be more than two miles long, and generally about nine hundred feet wide. The water in all this part of the river is shallow. I have been afraid from the first that to get enough water to flow down this long, shallow canal so much fall in the surface of the water would be required that nearly all, or more than all, of the increased head, namely, 1.6 feet, would be consumed in this way; that is, that the slope of the surface of the water in the canal would be greater than outside in the river. If this were so, then at low water the wing-dam would dam the water out of the pool; the water in the pool would be lower than it is now, none of the benefits claimed for the plan would be gained, but great damage would be done.

During the last two years I have given much attention to this subject. Last fall I finished complete soundings and measurements of all this part of the river. These soundings are numerous and accurate, embracing in all about 15,000 soundings. From them I have made cross-sections of the proposed canal 200 feet apart throughout its whole length, and from these cross-sections determined the capacity of the canal. The canal at low water would have an average depth of not much more than 1.2 feet.

Obstructions and the uneven bottom would produce eddies and contractions. I have from a study of the cross-sections determined as nearly as possible the form of bottom and sides of a canal of equal capacity for flow, but of a uniform cross-section at low water, and have calculated the flow in the latter. Of this canal the area of cross-section would be 980 square feet; the length of wet perimeter, 880 feet, (approximately;) length of canal, 12,500 feet.

(a) To discharge 4,400 cubic feet per second through this canal, the required fall is determined by calculation to be 26.5 feet; that is, it would be impossible.

(b) If we suppose the fall in the canal to be the same that it is in the river outside, namely, 1.6, the canal would discharge 1,001.78 cubic feet per second, representing at the upper dam 907.8 horse-power. To get even this, we would still have to clear a channel through the rock and mud at the head of the pool.

(c) With the stage of water 1 foot above low water, to discharge 4,400 cubic feet per second there would be required a fall of 3.598 feet, leaving the water in the pool still nearly 2 feet lower than in the river outside. With stage of water, the wing-dam would still injure the water-power, if the maximum amount of water for which the water is built (4,400 cubic feet per second) were required.

With the stage of water 1.45 feet above low water to discharge 4,400 cubic feet per second, the required fall in the canal would be 1.6 feet, the same as in the river outside, and no damage would be done by the wing-dam. As the river rises above this stage, the wing-dam, if built high enough, would begin to be beneficial.

It is to be remembered, however, that the supposed improvement is only desired or needed at low water. If the determined cross-section of the canal is correct, or anywhere near correct, then the calculations prove positively that at low water the wing-dam would dam the water out of the pool and effectually destroy the water-power.

Nor is this the principal injury that the wing-dam would effect. From the instant that it is completed the deposits in this channel must commence. It is impossible that the deposit should be less than it is now, and even if the canal were a good one to begin with, sooner or later it must be filled up, precisely as the head of the pool is now. Then, instead of having as we have now, the objectionable difficulty of clearing out a channel 2,400 feet long through the mud and rock, we should have the increased difficulty of clearing out and keeping clear a similar channel 12,500 feet, or nearly 2½ miles long. The expense of this last undertaking would make it impracticable.

Moreover, the deposit must be much greater than it is now. We have now the deposit only from the still water that comes into the pool. The wing-dam would give us additional deposits from the other water that does not come into the pool. It is proposed to build the wing-dam to a height of not more than 3 feet above low water. At higher stages, when the water is most charged with sediment, the river is to flow over this dam. It will then be like any other obstruction at the bottom of the Mississippi that causes a bar to form above and below it. The fillets of water below the level of the top of the dam will have from little to no current; will receive a portion of the sediment from the running water above, and, being too sluggish to carry it away, will deposit it. I believe the deposit abstracted from this water which we would not use, and from which we would get no benefit, would be more than that we now get from the water which comes into the pool and which we do use.

Some plans are proposed for washing out this deposit. They might mitigate the evil, but that they would succeed sufficiently to keep the water-power in operation at low-water is, I believe, subject to grave doubt.

COST.

To build the dam to the height of three feet above low water, of loose rock dumped in the river, (the cheapest construction,) would require, according to my estimate, 75,000 cubic yards and cost $225,000.

It has been proposed to deepen the canal between the wing-dam and the shore, increase its cross-section, and thus avoid the evil of injuring or partially destroying the water-power at low water, as shown by the calculations herein, and to use the rock thus obtained for building the wing-dam. This would be effectual, and is, on a larger scale, substantially the same as the other plan proposed, but to do it it would be necessary to coffer and pump out all of this part of the river. The expense would be very great and incompatible with the benefit obtained. The increased deposit described on page 10 would still obtain. It is true that the excavation would give a smooth channel which might be dredged, but, instead of having a lesser amount to dredge from a channel 2,400 feet long, there would be a larger amount to dredge from a channel 12,500 feet long.

To make this channel at all valuable, that is, to deliver the required 4,400 cubic feet per second and increase materially the height of water in the pool, would require at low water that the excavation clear a channel 4 feet deep and 800 feet wide. This channel would require a fall of .53 feet, and save 1.07 feet of head. Its cost would probably exceed $750,000.

If this plan of excavating is abandoned on account of its cost, I should say then that at low water the wing-dam would injure the water-power; that if provision is to be made to bring into the pool the required 4,400 cubic feet per second, then the wing-dam would injure the water-power for any stage of water less than 2½ feet above low water; that in any case it would multiply the difficulty and cost of keeping the water-power in good condition; that it would benefit the water-power when the stage of water is 3 feet above low water and the benefit is not needed, because then it can be obtained by other inexpensive means; that at stages of water between 0 and 3 feet above low water, if the arsenal is using little or no water, and the Moline Water-Power Company is using only about 750 horse-power, then that company would get material benefit from the plan in increased head; provided that the United States keeps the water-power in order.

The other plan proposed is to excavate a channel from deep water, when near the head of the wing-dam now built, down through the pool until deep water is reached. (See M M' on the map.) It is proposed to make this channel 400 feet wide, 3½ feet deep, about 2,400 feet long, and to use a portion of the rock obtained in extending the wing-dam now built about 500 feet (shown on the map) up-stream and out into deep water. This extension of the wing-dam would be into deep water where the current is rapid, and should turn a part of the current into the pool, and would raise the water a few inches at this place. I estimate this raise at .33 feet, which would give a little more than 3.8 feet of water in the channel excavated.

As has been stated, there is now a deposit of mud and sand over all the head of the pool, which dams the water out of the pool. Underlying this deposit is rough, uneven rock, coming sometimes near to the surface of low water. A channel cannot be dredged through it, because the rock interferes. To dredge out the deposit over all the head of the pool would be difficult, expensive, and nearly impossible, because of the uneven rock bottom. It would not be effectual, because the deposit would soon return in the same objectionable form.

The object of the proposed channel through this mud and rock is to furnish—

First. A sufficient water-way into the pool; and Second. An effectual and economical method of maintaining the water-way.

To determine the sufficiency of this water-way the calculations for flow through it give the following results:

To discharge through it the maximum amount to be provided for, namely, 4,400 cubic feet per second, would require at low water a fall of .59 feet.

To discharge the same amount through it with the stage of water 1 foot above low water would require a fall of .33 feet.

With the stage of water at 2 feet the fall would be .16 feet, or practically nothing. This supposes the channel to be clear of deposits.

Ordinarily the maximum amount of water would not be required. A considerable deposit in this channel might then exist and the capacity of the channel remain sufficient. In time of peace the amount of water used by the United States will be small. At such times, for many years to come, I suppose the combined consumption of both the arsenal and the Moline Company would not exceed 1,750 cubic feet per second, equivalent to 1,110 horse-power.

To discharge this amount through the channel, having in it a deposit 2 feet deep at extreme low water, would require a fall of .48 feet; with the stage of water at 1 foot, the required fall would be .12 feet; with the stage of water at 2 feet, the required fall would be .045 feet, or practically nothing. Therefore in time of war, or if at any time the arsenal required a large amount of power, the channel would have to be kept clear. At other times a considerable deposit could be allowed to accumulate and the water-way still be sufficient. It would be better if the depth could be increased to 4 feet, but the additional depth would cost about $40,000.

Second. The channel is also to afford an effectual and economical method of maintaining a water-way. If the use of the dredge cannot be avoided, then the channel would permit that the deposit be allowed to go on till it is deep and the dredge can get a full scoop and work economically. It would confine the dredging to a narrow channel and give a smooth bottom to dredge over. Moreover, I hope it may prevent the necessity for dredging, or at any rate reduce very much its amount and expense.

I have provided in the lower dam four large sluice or wash gates, which can be opened against any pressure of water. The other gates can be opened against the pressure of low water. By opening all the gates not in use in both dams a strong, rapid current would be drawn down through the proposed channel. Then by stirring up the mud and sand in the channel by mechanical means it is probable that the deposit might be washed out and its accumulation controlled in this way without much expense. This could be done from Saturday to Monday, when the water-power is not used.

Cost.

My estimate of the cost of excavating this channel is as follows:

Six hundred yards of coffer-dam, at $7 per yard	$4,200 00
Eleven hundred yards of mud-coffer, at $1 per yard	1,100 00
Pumping out water	350 00
Excavating 58,000 cubic yards of mud and sand, at 30 cents per yard	17,400 00
Excavating 52,000 cubic yards of rock, at $2.50 per yard	130,000 00
Removing coffers	1,300 00
Tram-ways, scows, and other expenses	3,000 00
Total	157,350 00

It is proposed to apply to this work whatever appropriation Congress makes for this object, and to prosecute the work as indicated as fast as appropriations for it can be obtained. A less amount than that asked for could not be applied so economically as the whole amount.

I believe it would be unwise and not economical for the Government after having expended so much money and built so great a water-power to leave it unfinished. It is also clear that the acts of Congress on this subject, and the contracts made with the Moline company, require that the work shall be done.

Comparing this second plan with the first one proposed, I think it is clear—

First. That it is more economical than the first plan; provided the first plan be made effective.

Second. That the second plan will be effective at low water, the only time when it is needed, and that at any reasonable cost the first plan cannot be made sufficiently effective to give at low water the maximum amount of water required.

Third. That the second plan admits of satisfactory and economical methods of removing the deposits that will always occur, and that the first plan would increase these deposits, and would furnish no satisfactory or economical method of getting rid of them.

Fourth. If the first plan were carried out, it seems to admit of no future increase of the water-power, except by digging out through rock the channel 2½ miles long between the proposed wing-dam and the Illinois shore; a work so expensive that I doubt if it would ever be undertaken.

If the second plan is carried out, and at any future time (fifty years hence) the wants of the arsenal and manufacturers in this region demand it, certainly the water-power can be increased at a reasonable cost by deepening the channel.

In the calculations for flow in the channel between the proposed wing-dam and the Illinois shore (first plan) the cross-section of available channel was taken for low water at 980 square feet. If this cross-section is correct, then the results obtained in the calculations for flow are very nearly correct. It may be claimed that this cross-section is too small. Certainly, if a larger cross-section is the true one, it would give better results. But, discarding all calculations, this much is true: The discharge of the Mississippi at this point at low water has been carefully measured and calculated, and is not more than 17,000 cubic feet per second. Not more than one-tenth of this flow is in the part of the river under consideration at extreme low water. To partition off this part of the river from the rest could not in any way increase its flow. Leave the slope of the surface the same that it is now, and the discharge is 1,700 cubic feet per second, equivalent to about 1,100 horse-power.

The water in the pool cannot be raised without diminishing the slope or fall of the channel above. To diminish this means diminish the flow and diminish the horse-power. Building the wing-dam would then confine us to 1,100 horse-power as a maximum. It would dam us off from getting any more, and to get this an opening would have to be cut down through the rock and deposits now at the head of the pool.

If, however, the water-power is to be reduced to, say, 1,000 horse-power and be constructed for the present needs of the Moline company only, then the slope in the channel above can be diminished; the surface of water in the pool will be raised, and the small increase of head at the water-power dam so much desired will be gained. But the deposit will at once commence, and unless cleared out will sooner or later reduce the power at low water to zero.

I regret the length of this paper, but the subject could not be very well explained in less space. As it is, much has been left out that is pertinent to the subject. The matter could be explained verbally much better while using the maps and drawings.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. W. FLAGLER,
Major of Ordnance,
Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel United States Army, Commanding.

To the CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
United States Army, Washington.

B.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 17, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a report of Major D. W. Flagler, commanding Rock Island arsenal, showing the necessity for an appropriation for completing the development of the water-power.

The agreements made by the United States with the Moline Water-Power Company binds the former under the obligations hereinafter stated:

First. Proceedings of Rock Island commission, of January 24, 1867, (Executive Document No. 27, Senate, second session Thirty-ninth Congress,) which requires "the Government to develop and maintain the power, so far as it can be done with the money heretofore appropriated, or that which may hereafter be appropriated, by Congress for that purpose; the Moline Water-Power Company to have the use in perpetuity * * * of one-fourth of the entire water-power developed." * * *

Second. Agreement with the Moline Water-Power Company, signed by General Grant, Secretary of War ad interim, and Charles Atkinson, president of water-power company, August 20, 1867, in which the company convey "their entire water-power" and the free use of so much of the bed of the river as may be required "for the further development of said water-power." The Moline company be granted the free use of "one-fourth of their entire water-power above conveyed." The United States agreeing to apply $40,000, "or so much thereof as the War Department may consider necessary, to complete the wing-dam," &c.

Third. Agreement between the Moline Water-Power Company and Secretary Rawlins, dated April 8, 1869, which stipulates that the United States shall resume * * * "the development and prosecute to completion, &c., the upper portion of the water-power and the removal of the deposits in the pool."

Upon this subject Major Flagler, in his report of May 6, 1875, to the Chief of Ordnance, says: "I certainly believe that the obligations of the United States set forth in these papers have been thus far properly discharged, and somewhat liberally discharged, in the benefit conferred upon the Moline Water-Power Company, and that you should not feel that injustice has been done to this company by the United States. The Government has certainly bound itself to develop and maintain the water-power. What this development and maintenance shall be is not exactly set forth, and has caused, and probably always will cause, discussion, because only one party to the benefits to be obtained has to expend the money for them." And, further, it is a nice question to decide to what extent the development and maintenance shall go on, and whether the Government, which pays the expenses thereof, shall not be the judge of the manner and quantity of such development and maintenance. At any rate, the action of this department is limited by the appropriations, and I have no doubt that full justice has been done to the interests of the Moline Water-Power Company. The necessity for further appropriations is apparent, and this Bureau has estimated for the next fiscal year as follows:

"Improvement of the water-power, $60,000."

"NOTE.—This estimate is for opening a channel in the rock-bed of the river and improving the wing-dam to increase the amount of water flowing into the water-power pool during low water."—Book of Estimates, page 124

This sum, however, is not sufficient to complete the work as wisdom and economy demands that it should be done, as is shown in the report transmitted herewith.

The Moline Water-Power Company feel aggrieved because the quantity of water at its disposal is not sufficient. It is admitted that the passage to the pool is obstructed, and that to give the Moline Water-Power Company and the United States the full benefit of the development already made, measures must be taken to cause a sufficient flow of water into the pool to supply the necessary power. The Government is bound by its agreement (after taking possession of the water-power property) to do this work, and in the interest of the two parties interested, for economy, and particularly for the protection of valuable interests to the United States, the work should be done now, and the entire amount, $157,350, should be appropriated.

Two methods are proposed for doing this work. Major Flagler's report, transmitted herewith, fully proves that the proper way to effect the object is by carrying out the plan proposed in that report; that it will, for the least money, satisfy most of the conditions and give all the water necessary for the company and the United States, and make provision for dredging out the channel, and at all times keep the work in working condition. This plan, No. 2, is therefore approved and recommended, and the money required, $157,350, should be asked from Congress at the present session.

This matter is respectfully recommended to the honorable Secretary of War for favorable action, and that it be brought to the attention of Congress.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. V. BENÉT,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, February 19, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit for the consideration of Congress a communication from the Chief of Ordnance, inclosing a report by the commanding officer Rock Island arsenal, asking for an appropriation of $157,350 to complete the development of the water-power. The agreements entered into by my predecessors under the joint resolution of Congress of March 2, 1867, make it the duty of the United States to carry out this work to completion, and the interests of private parties require that the work should be done as speedily as possible. The whole appropriation asked for would enable this Department to complete the work and afford the relief called for in a few months, and thus fulfill the engagements entered into by the United States.

Should the full amount not be appropriated, as asked for by the Chief of Ordnance, the sum of $60,000 at least should be given in order to enable the Department to make progress in the work.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

To the SPEAKER,
House of Representatives.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 24, 1876.

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the letter of Secretary of War and accompanying reports in relation to appropriation for improvement of water-power at Rock Island arsenal, recommend that the Committee on Appropriations grant the amount asked for, namely, $157,350.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 18, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to my letter to the Secretary of War, of February 17, 1876, on the subject of completing the development of the water-power at the Rock Island arsenal, submitting a special estimate of $157,350, and earnestly recommending that its appropriation be made by Congress, which letter was submitted to Congress by the honorable Secretary of War. This special estimate was made at that late day, after the regular estimate had been submitted to Congress, because the data upon which it was based could not be obtained earlier, and it was intended to take the place of the $60,000 for the same embraced in the Book of Estimates.

In the recent revision of the War Department estimates by the Secretary of War this special estimate of $157,350 was inadvertently overlooked, not being in the Book of Estimates, and the attention of the Secretary of War was not called to it. Had it come up when revising the estimates, I would have recommended, as I do now, that the entire appropriation be made as an economical measure, and as the surest and speediest means of carrying out satisfactorily the agreement entered into by the Government in obtaining possession of the water-power.

I have the honor to submit the case for your favorable action, as I understand that the revised estimates are supposed to exclude this special estimate of $157,350.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. V. BENÉT,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield what remains of my time to the gentleman from Rhode Island, [Mr. BALLOU.]

CONGRESSIONAL PRINTING.

Mr. BALLOU. Mr. Chairman, there were some remarks and statements made by my colleagues on the Printing Committee on the resolution to refer to the Committee on Appropriations certain sections of their report which I think upon calm reflection they would desire to greatly modify, or perhaps change altogether. They are so different from my own understanding of the matter, and so calculated in my judgment to mislead, that I feel that it is due to myself, to the Congressional Printer, and to this House that the plain facts should be stated.

Perhaps it has been made sufficiently clear to the House heretofore that an over or under charge to a Department does not necessarily affect the cost of printing, as these charges are simply an approximation of the cost made from general rules and estimates as a guide for the amount of work to be done for any particular appropriation. But the account of the Congressional Printer with the Treasurer of the United States will show the real cost of every item, whether for repairs, material, or labor, as a voucher must be left with the Treasurer for every dollar received. It is very difficult to purchase goods either so perfect in quality or so low in price of any parties that others interested may not afterward be found who would have been glad to have given you a much better bargain if you had patronized them. It is not easy to see, however, that there is any particular inducement or temptation to the Government Printer to trade with others than those with whom, all things considered, he can best serve the Government, and to change his customer whenever its interests would be promoted thereby. In the searching investigation for fraud in the Government Printing Office no instance has been discovered in which any pecuniary benefit has been received or sought for by the Congressional Printer in his private capacity, either directly or indirectly, on account of any Government patronage or official transaction.

But I wish especially now to call attention to three particulars made prominent in the previous discussion, in which the Government Printer is charged—

First. With having deposited government money illegally in bank.

Second. With having sworn falsely in relation to the money deposited in the safe of the printing office.

Third. That "he was invited to be present at the examination of every witness," and that "at the examination of any witness he was never excluded from the committee-room."

In order to obtain a definite and clear statement of the facts on these several points, I addressed a letter to the Government Printer for the necessary information, which it will be unnecessary to read, as all that is essential is quoted by him and appears verbatim in his reply, which is as follows:

OFFICE OF CONGRESSIONAL PRINTER,
Washington, D. C., May 22, 1876.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of this date. You are pleased to propound to me certain inquiries relating to the late so-called printing investigation in the House, which I propose to answer seriatim with entire frankness and candor.

You say—

First. "In the RECORD of May 19 you are quoted as having answered under oath to the question of the House Committee on Printing as follows:

"Question. Have you no deposit in any bank in the city?

"Answer. No, sir.

"Please state whether this answer was correct; and, if so, how you reconcile it with the testimony of J. A. Ruff and H. C Swain that A. M. Clapp was a depositor in their respective banks at that time."

Had the committee been fair enough to quote my entire testimony on that point, neither yourself nor the public would be in doubt as to the correctness of my answer. I was being questioned as to my official action and in relation to certain moneys belonging to the Government which had been retained in my possession, and the answer was truthful. I had no deposit of Government funds in any bank in the city. The accounts sworn to by Messrs. Ruff and Swain were my private accounts, and as my private affairs had not been alluded to, the question and answer had no reference whatever to them; of this I think the committee must be fully aware.

Second. "Please reconcile also your answer to the question in the same RECORD—"What amount of money you now have on deposit in your safe belonging to the Government, in which you say 'somewhere in the vicinity of $50,000,' with the report of the committee's clerk, who says: 'I counted the same in the safe, and found that it amounted to $16,257.99.'"

In making that answer it was done without proper consideration. I had been explaining to the committee the purpose and manner of the use of the money in question in the office; that it was always in the safe or on the pay-rolls of the office, or to my credit in the Treasury subject to my check. When I answered, it did not occur to my mind that a part of it was at that time on the pay-rolls as vouchers in the Treasury Department. But immediately afterward, as you no doubt recollect, I advised the committee that possibly all of it might not be in the safe at that moment; a portion might be on the pay-rolls. But to this the committee paid no attention, would not give me the benefit of a record of my statement, but hurried their clerk to the office to place me in a false position. It appeared that my expressed apprehension was well founded, as all but the sum named as being found there was on the pay-rolls in the Treasury. I had no motive or purpose in misrepresenting the matter. I was mistaken, and was not allowed to have the benefit of the correction that immediately followed.

"Third. Also please state whether the chairman of the committee is strictly correct when he says, as quoted in the same RECORD, 'he [Mr. A. M. Clapp] was invited to be present at the examination of every witness; that he was there part of the time, and was never denied the privilege of being there; an invitation was extended to him to be present;' and the statement of the member of the committee from Mississippi, 'that whenever he chose to be present at the examination of any witness, he was never excluded from the committee-room; * * * he was there on many occasions, as is well known, * * * when his clerks and foremen were examined; he was present at the examination of several of them, and I might say that he prompted them so far as he was allowed to do so.'"

I am greatly surprised at the concurrent declarations of these Representatives on this point, for they are not sustained by the facts. I was not notified and did not know when Mr. De Vinne, Mr. Gane, Mr. Garner, Mr. Edwards, Mr. Solomons, Mr. Dorsey, Mr. Parker, Mr. Judd, Mr. Pearson, Mr. Behlé, and a long list of others who were called and were before the committee to testify in this case, and hence I could not be present to confront and cross-examine them. When my clerks and foremen were called to the committee-room, I was not invited to accompany them nor to be present to listen to their testimony, except for a few minutes upon two occasions; one was when Mr. Roberts was on the stand. I was admitted to the room, but not to take part in the examination; only to wait until he was through, when I was to testify. Another occasion was when one of the clerks, Mr. Collins, was called to the stand before I left the room. I lingered to take him with me to the office when he closed his testimony, and during his examination—I think near its close for that day—I presumed to put a single question to him by way of cross-examination. The committee had found that he had received $20 from a customer of the office which he had omitted to enter on his cash-book.

The gentleman from Mississippi was badgering the young man on account of his remissness, when I ventured to interpose the following question: "Did you enter that money on your journal?" His reply was, "Yes!" For this interposition I was grossly insulted by the gentleman from Mississippi, as this was not the character of testimony sought by the committee.

You cannot have forgotten this incident, I am sure. And this is a specimen of the opportunity I had of being present to cross-examine witnesses.

There are two other incidents connected with this investigation which I will refer to as evidence that the statement that I "was never excluded from the committee-room" is entirely erroneous. You may recollect the circumstance. Upon one of the occasions when I was called as a witness Mr. J. A. Ruff was waiting to testify. He was put upon the stand, and when the first question was propounded to him his answer was checked, and the chairman, and I think the gentleman from Mississippi also, requested me to leave the committee-room while Mr. Ruff gave his testimony. I did so, and when Mr. Ruff was through I was admitted again. I am sure you will corroborate this statement, if present, and, if not, Mr. Ruff recollects it well, and will verify it.

I desire, in this connection, to state another occurrence which will show whether or not I could be present at the examination of a witness whenever I chose. Mr. Collins, one of my subordinates, was called for to be present on Saturday, April 8, at 10.30 o'clock in the morning, and I was requested to be present an hour or two later.

At the hour named for me to present myself I was at the door, which was guarded by a faithful sentinel outside. I asked if I could go in, and requested him to give my name to the committee and say I was at their service. The word returned was in substance that I could wait on the outside until I was needed. I waited for several hours without gaining admission, became tired of cultivating the acquaintance of the outside guardian of the door to the secret chamber, and departed.

The committee adjourned, and I was not admitted to the room at all on that occasion. And, sir, if I ever had an invitation to be present, I was not made aware of it. I was invited there at no time while the committee was in session, unless it was to be put on the witness-stand; and the double assertion that I was invited and could be present when I chose and was never excluded from the committee-room is at variance with the facts.

The committee had promised me all that they now contend that I enjoyed at their hands, but they did not in any proper and honorable degree realize to me any of their promises in this behalf. If they ever intended to do so, they evidently changed their minds, for I was grossly deceived and wronged by their treatment of this case.

In this I have given you a plain statement of facts, in which I "nothing extenuate nor set down aught in malice."

I am yours, respectfully,

A. M. CLAPP,
Congressional Printer.

Hon. L. W. BALLOU.

Mr. Chairman, things appear very different when viewed from different stand-points, and what is deemed fair by those who are in pursuit of guilt seems altogether unfair by those conscious of innocence. Contrary to the sound maxim that "every man is presumed to be innocent until he is proved guilty," I think unintentionally this investigation has been carried on with the presumption that the Government Printer was guilty, and the witnesses have been summoned and examined for the purpose of confirming it, and therefore his presence to hear the testimony, to cross-examine, or to explain was not deemed desirable. It might lead to collusion with witnesses and frustrate justice. And when we consider that many of the witnesses were unfriendly either to the Government Printer or the Government Office, or so limited in their knowledge of its affairs as to form very erroneous opinions, being discharged employés, merchants anxious for Government patronage, printers and binders who deemed that the Government was monopolizing a business which should be theirs, it is not strange that in an ex parte examination, where the witness only was admitted and then the door locked and guarded, extravagant statements should be made and an impression produced of incompetency, wastefulness, and probable corruption.

That the Government Office is a perfect institution, or that those who conduct it have always done the wisest thing in its management, or that its system of keeping accounts may not in some respects be improved, is not contended; and possibly some saving can be made by giving more particular attention to the purchase of material, and it may be some reduction made in portions of the labor; yet taking it for all in all, it is now one of the best-appointed institutions for the purposes for which it was established in this or any other country, and its efficiency is demonstrated not only by the vast amount of work performed, but by its quality and the promptness of its production. Certainly that cannot be all corrupt that produces so much that is good.

And with such an institution, established by the Government for its special benefit, with all the machinery and material necessary to carry on in the most extensive manner the various branches of business for all the Departments, and after having tried the "private contract system" for a series of years and finding it inadequate and unsatisfactory, how unwise it seems to go back to the old way, surrendering by positive law the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and by the manner of payment the Departmental printing, leaving only the Congressional printing to the present office; for the proposed act provides that money cannot be drawn from the appropriations of the several Departments for printing until the work for which the money is intended is finished, delivered, and accompanied by an itemized statement of the cost; when it is a fact that a majority of the Department work is many months being completed, and in many cases several years, while labor must be paid at least monthly, which will prevent the Government Printer from doing the work, as he can draw no money to pay for it until the whole is completed. Thus, under the plea of mismanagement, this large accumulated property of years is to be sacrificed, the Government lose the control of the business, and become subject to the cupidity and dictation of private contractors. Surely they will not take the risk without the prospect of large profits, which with equally good management the Government can save to itself, and be master of its own affairs.

I have no disposition to put any obstacles in the way of those who are honestly striving to expose corruption, or to apologize for it when found; neither will I silently stand by and hear the name and character of a public officer or private citizen denounced as corrupt and fraudulent without proof, if it is in my power to defend them. And whatever else may have been testified to or thought to be proved by partisan witnesses against the Government Printer, there is not the least shadow of evidence that one cent of Government funds has ever been fraudulently appropriated to himself or to any of his subordinates; and the charges of inefficiency and extravagance may sink into insignificance when a proper opportunity is given for a personal explanation and that inestimable privilege and right of every American citizen shall again be restored, of meeting your accuser face to face to answer and cross-examine.

The brightest and most treasured names in our history, and those who stand out most prominently now as leaders and benefactors whom the people would honor, have been and are traduced and vilified as corrupt and ambitious gamblers and speculators with the public means and public interests for their own personal selfish ends.

I would not weaken in the public mind the enormity of the crime of him who robs me of my purse, but greatly would I magnify the crime of him who robs me of my good name.

The inestimable treasure transmitted to us by Washington, which enriches our country, humanity, and the world, was not gold, nor station, nor title, nor office, but that sublime character, pure, upright, noble, a model of true greatness. And yet even he was grossly traduced, and all who have succeeded him in the highest office the people confer have in their turn been vilified; and the work of defamation still goes on, form and wings being given to every idle rumor that tends to blacken the names of distinguished men. Let corruption be exposed and punished, but the right of the accused to meet his accuser is essential to all. It will not save the guilty, but it is absolutely necessary to protect the innocent from the slanders of malice and envy, from which no man is safe.

Our real riches consist in what we are, and not in what we possess; and the only inheritance worthy to leave to our children, or that shall be a blessing to posterity, is a good name, a self-sacrificing, upright, noble character. He who loses these loses all that is worth preserving. He who unjustly takes them from us robs us of our richest treasure. All have the right to this treasure, however humble or exalted, and all may possess and transmit it to others. Let us be careful how we deprive any man of the means of defending and preserving it.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that, by unanimous consent, all general debate on the bill now close, and that the House proceed to the consideration of it by paragraphs for amendment.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. I would also like to have unanimous consent that when the hour of half past four is reached the House take a recess until eight o'clock, to proceed with the consideration of this bill in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that at half past four a recess be taken until eight o'clock? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will proceed to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. FORT. I desire to submit to the Chair the question whether the order for a recess can be made in Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be understood as the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. FORT. The committee cannot control the House in that matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands very well that the order would not be obligatory on the House. It simply binds the gentlemen present, if they make no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. My object was simply to ask the unanimous consent of the committee, and at the same time to give notice that in the House I would move for a recess.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOAR. Can the committee give unanimous consent for a recess?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated, in answer to the interrogatory of the gentleman from Illinois, that the Chair does not understand that the action of the committee in giving unanimous consent is obligatory on the House. But it was expressed as the unanimous purpose of the committee that a recess should be taken until eight o'clock. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, for the objects hereinafter expressed, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, namely:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The following sums are hereby appropriated to pay the widows of late members of the present Congress, in conformity with the direction of the House of Representatives, namely:

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay the widow of Henry H. Starkweather, $2,500.

To pay the widow of James Buffinton, $3,136.98.

To pay the widow of John W. Head, $1,250.

To pay the widow of Samuel M. Fite, $1,250.

To pay the widow of Garnett McMillan, late member-elect from the ninth district of Georgia, $1,250.

Mr. WARREN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, as an additional paragraph, the following:

To pay the executor of the estate of Henry Wilson, late Vice-President of the United States, the sum of $10,222, to be held and applied by said executor as if a part of the estate of said Wilson given and bequeathed by his will.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it is proper to reserve the question of order on that amendment until the gentleman from Massachusetts is heard in support of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. WARREN. I trust there will be no objection to this amendment. The precedents in the matter are found in the appropriation to the widow of General Harrison and in the appropriation to the widow of Mr. Lincoln. In each case the sum of $25,000, a year's salary, was appropriated to the widow, less any sum that had been received during the year of death. There is no precise precedent for an appropriation in the case of the death of the Vice-President. There have been but two instances of the death of a Vice-President in office since the adoption of the Constitution. One was the case of Elbridge Gerry, a Massachusetts man; the other was the case of Mr. King, who died without having rendered any service, within a month of his taking office, and who, I believe, left no family.

The facts in regard to Mr. Wilson's case are somewhat peculiar. He had served the country, as gentlemen know, for a great many years, and he died poor. He left, I think, nothing after the payment of his debts, except the house in which he lived, which was an ordinary frame house of no great value. His family consisted of an adopted child, a girl of tender years, I think seven or eight years of age, and the mother of his wife, also dependent upon him. It will be observed that I have drawn this amendment so that the money shall be paid to the executors to be disposed of according to the directions of the will. That will carry it to the support of this child and aged lady. I trust there will be no objection to the amendment.

I do not think there is anything in the point of order, and for this reason the salary of the Vice-President is provided by general law. This will not increase the regular and ordinary expenditure of the Government called for by existing statutes. As matters stand now the President pro tempore of the Senate does not succeed to the salary of the Vice-President. And while to be sure we might make something if we did not pay this on account of the death of the Vice-President, yet on the other hand we do not lose anything. The expenses of the Government go on in their ordinary course. In the cases I have referred to as precedents, where there was a death of a President in office, the payment was in the nature of a donation, because another succeeded to the office and drew the salary, and the $25,000 was a gift outright. Here we do not increase the ordinary expenses of the Government at all; and I hope there will be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Without pressing for the moment the point of order, I wish to say that, however desirable it might be to make such an appropriation of money, it is still an appropriation without any precedent in our history. I believe in two instances a year's pay has been paid out of the Treasury for the widow of a deceased President of the United States. But here the proposition is to appropriate the balance of the pay for the term of service of the Vice-President of the United States to other persons than his widow.

There would seem to be force in the two precedents to which reference has been made; but, while it is clear that this appropriation is not in order on this bill, or in any other bill making appropriations of money, I do not feel called upon to press the point of order. I think the responsibility of meeting a question like this should rest upon the entire committee. I shall therefore not press the point of order, and, so far as I am concerned, the subject may go before this committee for its decision; and the only question is whether we shall extend the precedent further than it has heretofore gone.

I am aware, sir, that the impulse of gentlemen is to make this appropriation of money. We are inclined to act with magnanimity; that is pleasant to all. Men desire to act with magnanimity toward those who have been near and dear to us, when our acts connect themselves with the memory of those who are now no more. Therefore the impulse of every gentleman, so far as his feelings and sympathies are concerned, would be to make this appropriation of money.

But the question is whether it is proper to do so out of the public revenues. In behalf of this appropriation but two precedents can be cited, and those the cases of widows of Presidents of the United States; none in behalf of collateral relatives. I understand from the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the mother of the wife of the late Vice-President and an adopted child would be the recipients of this bounty of the Government.

I am well aware that everything can be said in regard to the memory of the distinguished citizen of this country who lately held the office of Vice-President. His own high and generous character, his humane impulses, and the interest that he had in all that pertained to the elevation of his race, all this speaks well for his memory, and will do so for all time to come in this country. But the question is simply whether we as the Representatives of the people, dealing with the public revenue, are justifiable under the Constitution and laws of the country in making an appropriation like this. That is a question which the committee will have to decide.

Mr. HOAR. I think the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is in error when he says there are but two precedents, the cases of the widows of two deceased Presidents of the United States, for the action which is now proposed. No man can be more opposed than I am to the principle which prevails in other countries of giving pensions either to retired public servants or to their families; a practice which has overburdened the English people, as we all know, with pensions for favored classes.

In this country we recognize only the obligation to give pensions to soldiers who have served the country in war, and recently we have given pensions to a very few judges who, holding office for life and deprived of the opportunity of earning money by other business, after a long term of service have retired from public office.

We have, however, always enforced and acted upon this principle, that where a member of Congress, or a person holding a high executive office, or in our service here, in an employment which has called upon him to forego the ordinary methods of earning money by requiring him to devote his time to the public business, has suddenly been stricken down, we have paid for a brief period after death, for the benefit of the dependent family of such person, the salary which he would have received had he lived. We did that in the case of the widow of President Lincoln; we did it in the case of the widow of President Harrison, as my colleague [Mr. WARREN] has already stated. We have done it in the case of every page or doorkeeper of this House who has died in office since I have been a member of the House. We have done it in the case of every member of the House. We have appropriated a sum equal to the pay for three months, or six months, or nine months, whatever was supposed to be a reasonable time, for the benefit of those who were left by a dying public officer.

It is upon that principle, for which there are a hundred precedents in our appropriation bills, that this grant for those who were dependent upon the late Vice-President Wilson is asked. The late Vice-President was a person who for years had devoted himself to the public service. He was a man of the most frugal life, living at home and here in the most plain and inexpensive way; a person of such generosity and kindliness of nature that he could not keep money in his pocket when any suffering human being came near him would be benefited by his parting with it.

Under these circumstances he has died without leaving any considerable property, and leaving two women who were dependent upon him for support and one for education. It is proposed to continue for the brief period of one year and three months to those dependent upon the late Vice-President Wilson the salary he would have received as Vice-President if he had lived.

The Committee of the Whole will remember, as has been already stated, that this will be no loss to the Government. It is not a case where another public officer comes in and receives the salary which the late Vice-President would have received had he lived. His functions as presiding officer of the Senate are performed by a member of the Senate, who receives his ordinary salary as a Senator from the State of Michigan. I trust, therefore, that there will be no objection to this amendment.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. If I am correctly advised, there being now no Vice-President, there is no person who is in receipt of the salary of the Vice-President. As the balance of the term for which Mr. Wilson was elected Vice-President is but a few months, I certainly hope that the Committee of the Whole will not refuse to adopt this amendment.

I do not care what precedents there may be. It is entirely within our power to vote this money, and I think it is our duty to do so. The Vice-President is, next to the President, the most prominent official we have in the Government.

This deceased gentleman discharged his duty faithfully without complaint from any one to the day of his death. The fact that he died a poor man, after a very long term of public service, is the best proof in the world that he was an honest man. I hope, therefore, that the committee will adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. WARREN.]

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a vote.

Mr. KELLEY. Allow me one moment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WARREN] that instead of establishing what seems to be a new precedent, that by appropriating for the unexpired term of office we follow the precedents which have been heretofore acted upon and appropriate a sum equal to the salary for one year, as was done in the case of Mrs. Harrison, the widow of President Harrison, and also in the case of the widow of President Lincoln. In that view of the matter such an appropriation cannot be regarded as going beyond reasonable limits.

Mr. KELLEY. There is another precedent, the case of the daughter of General Taylor, to whom, I think, $25,000 was voted on motion of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.]

Mr. HOLMAN. If it is in order, I would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WARREN] if he will accept an amendment to make the pay for one year, and that will be substantially in harmony with the precedents?

Mr. WARREN. My view was to provide for the payment of the salary to the end of the term, and I thought that inasmuch as the excess over one year was so small no objection would be made; however, if there is objection to it on that ground, I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. [Cries of "Pay the whole."]

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well, sir; I will not press the amendment.

The question was taken on Mr. WARREN's amendment, and it was agreed to.

The clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

To pay the widow of James Buffinton $3,136.88.

Mr. FORT. I desire to offer the following amendment, to come in after the clause just read:

Which shall be allowed in lieu of the three months' pay now allowed by law.

I wish to say in reference to this matter that in this case I know, because I investigated it, that the widow of Mr. Buffinton is entitled by law to three months' pay.

Mr. HOLMAN. What case is that?

Mr. FORT. The case of Mr. Buffinton's widow.

Mr. RANDALL. Do you wish to cut the amount down? I hope not.

Mr. FORT. If the gentleman had paid attention he would have seen that my amendment does not propose to cut it down.

Mr. RANDALL. I am paying attention, and I do not wish the amount cut down.

Mr. FORT. Certainly not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that the amendment of the gentleman does not reduce the sum.

Mr. FORT. Mr. Buffinton died on the 6th of March. His widow, under the law as it now stands, was entitled to draw three months' pay, and perhaps has drawn it. I presume she has. Now the amount appropriated in this bill is the amount that was sent to the Committee on Appropriations from the Committee on Accounts. That committee investigated the matter and found that the new member elected in November had covered into the Treasury his pay from March to November, and that is exactly the sum that it is designed the widow should have. But I do not suppose the committee intended to give her the sum named in the bill and also the three months' pay besides.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there is some misapprehension about this matter. I find that Mrs. Buffinton has received the sum of $1,250, being the amount she was entitled to receive under the law. That would leave $1,941.27 still due; so that the amount here should be stricken out.

Mr. FORT. It is not necessary to strike it out.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend will see that his amendment has no limitation, because the bill appropriates three thousand-odd dollars.

Mr. FORT. The bill as it stands is wrong. I do not suppose that the committee intend to pay Mrs. Buffinton the salary for the remainder of the term and also three months' pay.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask to have the resolution of the House passed upon this subject read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the amendment be again read.

Mr. RANDALL. I want the resolution read so as to explain why the committee put the sum at $3,100.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas Hon. James Buffinton, a member-elect to this Congress from the first district of the State of Massachusetts, died on the 7th day of March, 1875, after a service of many years in this House, eaving a widow and children surviving; and whereas Hon. WILLIAM W. CRAPO, who was elected to fill the vacancy in said district, has voluntarily covered into the Treasury his pay from the 4th day of March to the 2d day of November last, amounting to $1,136.98: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be instructed to provide in the miscellaneous appropriation bill to pay to Mrs. Sarah Buffinton, widow of the said James Buffinton, deceased, $1,876.71, which, with the three month's pay allowed the said widow by existing law, amounts to the sum which was covered into the Treasury by said sitting member.

Mr. FORT. Now I think that this committee will see clearly that the Committee on Appropriations do not intend that this bill shall be passed as they have reported it in this particular. They simply intend that the widow of Mr. Buffinton shall have the pay that he would have been entitled to had he lived until the 2d day of November last. This provision gives the widow that pay, as well as three months' pay which she has already received under the law. The resolution which has been read passed the House long ago and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and it fixed the exact amount due.

Mr. RANDALL. I supposed the object was to give the widow the amount turned over into the Treasury by Mr. CRAPO, and that was the reason why the amount was placed at $3,100.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk. The object is to pay Mrs. Buffinton up to the time of the election of Mr. Buffinton's successor, Hon. Mr. CRAPO, his successor, having surrendered all the pay he was entitled to up to his election.

Mr. FORT. Well, if the bill passes as it now stands, she will draw that three months' pay in addition.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would say that the amendment I offer was drawn up by the gentleman who now represents that district and understands exactly the condition of this matter.

Mr. FORT. The resolution as it went to the Committee on Appropriations was right; the bill is not right as it now stands.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman to listen to my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the word "Buffinton" in line 14 and inserting "in addition to the amount already received by her, $1,941.77."

Mr. FORT. I withdraw my amendment. It had in view the same thing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous:

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay Robert Christy and Samuel Shellabarger counsel fees in the habeas corpus case of Hallet Kilbourn, $1,000 each, the same to be disbursed under the direction of the Committee of Accounts and to be added to the miscellaneous item of the contingent fund of the House.

To pay George W. Green, contestee, expenses in contested-election case of Green vs. Van Wyck.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I move to amend by striking out "$1,000," appropriated in line 27 as "counsel fees," and insert "$500."

Several MEMBERS. Too late.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule each clause of an appropriation bill is considered as a section; and the objection is made that this amendment comes too late.

Mr. RANDALL. In justice to the Committee on Appropriations I want to state that the appropriation named in the bill is in accordance with the unanimous recommendation, as we understand, of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. LAWRENCE. That is the fact, as I understand it.

Mr. RANDALL. I have here the recommendation of the Judiciary Committee, which I would like to have read.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. Certainly this section was not finished when I rose and made my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana comes too late under the rules; and that point the Chair unhesitatingly sustains.

Mr. RANDALL. In justice to the Committee on Appropriations, I ask unanimous consent that the recommendation of the Judiciary Committee on this subject may be inserted in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The resolution of the Judiciary Committee is as follows:

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE, June 16, 1876.

Mr. LYNDE submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this committee $2,000 is a reasonable compensation for services rendered by Samuel Shellabarger and Robert Christy as counsel under employment of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House in the habeas corpus case of Hallet Kilbourn, the same to be disbursed under the direction of the Committee of Accounts and to be added to the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the House; and we recommend that it be provided for in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

On motion of Mr. MCCRARY, the clerk was directed to furnish a copy of the above resolution to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I want to call the attention of the Chairman to the fact that the Clerk made no stop whatever after reading the clause which I desire to amend.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must say to the gentleman from Indiana that if the Clerk should make a pause at the conclusion of every line or sentence, an appropriation bill would not be speedily passed. The Clerk reports that he had passed from the clause of the bill which the gentleman proposes to amend, and was reading another clause when the gentleman rose to offer his amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I submit that this is taking "snap judgment" upon a member of this House who was on his feet calling "Mr. Chairman."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] desire to appeal from the ruling of the Chair?

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask the Chair——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to appeal?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not desire to be discourteous to the Chair, but I submit——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no objection to hearing the gentleman from Illinois, if he will simply state the purpose for which he rises.

Mr. SPRINGER. I submit, if the Chair pleases, that——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman ask unanimous consent to be heard?

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the Chair allow me to state a point?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman whether he desires to appeal from the ruling of the Chair?

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order. I desire to state that the gentleman from Indiana was on the floor while the Clerk was reading the clause which the gentleman desires to amend and was calling "Mr. Chairman;" and the Clerk, in the face of that call, read beyond that clause. Now I submit in all fairness that the gentleman had the right to move this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Illinois is not in order in undertaking to discuss a point of order that has been decided by the Chair, unless he desires to take an appeal from that decision.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to state a fact in connection with it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to take an appeal?

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I desire to take an appeal.

Mr. BANNING. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will remember that that proceeding cannot be had in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Indiana will reduce his appeal to writing and send it to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit as a question of order that it is not the practice of this House or the Committee of the Whole to require an appeal to be reduced to writing under ordinary circumstances. It has seldom been done, on account of the consumption of time.

The CHAIRMAN. If it be the pleasure of the committee, the Chair will submit the question without further consumption of time.

The CHAIRMAN having called Mr. CLYMER to the chair, the question was put, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" and there were—ayes 101, noes 35.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CLYMER having taken the Chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Union generally and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House now take a recess till eight o'clock this evening. I desire to state that we want a business session to-night, and if there is no quorum present it will necessitate a call of the House. I hope gentlemen will come.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FREEMAN for ten days on account of important business;

To Mr. BURLEIGH for ten days;

To Mr. J. H. BAGLEY for ten days on account of sickness;

To Mr. STONE for ten days from the 24th instant;

To Mr. WARD for two weeks on account of illness in his family; and

To Mr. MONROE from evening sessions of the House on account of ill-health.

HOUSTON AND TEXAS CENTRAL RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Quartermaster-General, relative to a bill for the relief of the Houston and Texas Central Railroad Company; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LIEUTENANT JOHN C. WHITE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers in the case of Lieutenant John C. White, United States Army; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 46) granting the right of way for a railroad and telegraph line to the Walla Walla and Columbia River Railroad Company across Fort Walla Walla military reservation, in Washington Territory;

An act (S. No. 166) to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

An act (S. No. 375) for the relief of Maria W. Sanders; and

An act (S. No. 34) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the joint stock company of the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington," approved March 2, 1867.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL that the House take a recess till eight o'clock was then agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until eight o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House re-assembled at eight o'clock p. m., Mr. COX, Speaker pro tempore, in the chair.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the civil sundry appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. CLYMER in the chair) on the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay George W. Green, contestee, expenses in contested-election case of Green vs. Van Wyck, fourteenth district of New York, Forty-first Congress, $3,000.

Mr. HOAR. I raise the point of order on that part of the bill that it is not provided for by any existing law. It is to pay some old contested-election case.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the uniform practice of the House the point of order has been decided to be not well taken.

Mr. HOAR. I take an appeal from that decision of the Chair, and will state from my own knowledge that there has been no such uniform practice. There cannot be found an instance in this Congress where it has been held to be in order. The Chair takes it for granted in making that observation that it is some contested-election case of the present Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. Does not the gentleman remember that in the last Congress there were as many as eight contestees paid in this manner?

Mr. HOAR. But they belonged to the same Congress, except in one or two cases where special bills were introduced, and they were referred to the Committee of the Whole. Bills were passed allowing those cases.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HOAR. I raise the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Pending that I should like to have read the grounds upon which the committee stand.

Mr. HOAR. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. What does the gentleman do?

Mr. HOAR. The question on the merits is not open on the point of order. If the Chair takes the responsibility of ruling that paragraph to be in order, I take an appeal.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Massachusetts has made an assertion that the House has never done such a thing, and I wish to show precisely the ground upon which the committee stand in reference to this provision of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOAR. My objection is to a discussion on the merits.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say last year we appropriated in a corresponding bill in precisely the same way for like cases.

Mr. HOAR. My point of order is taken.

Mr. MCCRARY. A motion was made for suspension of the rules so as to make it in order, as the RECORD will show. It was done against my earnest protest.

Mr. HOAR. That is my recollection.

Mr. RANDALL. This is one which was then omitted.

Mr. HOAR. I warn the House they are opening the door to one of the wickedest abuses ever perpetrated.

Mr. RANDALL. After the gentleman has made such a remark as that, I ask to have the paper read as a matter of right.

Mr. HOAR. I do not speak of the merits of this case at all.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman has no right to use such language. It is unbecoming in him, and unbecoming in a legislative body.

Mr. HOAR. I am responsible for the language I used. I object to the reading of that paper.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to discuss the point of order, and in that connection I desire to have the paper read.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania makes this a part of his remarks on the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir. It presents the reasons which induced the committee to insert this paragraph in the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I object to the gentleman discussing the merits of the appropriation on the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. You have been discussing the merits; you just now described this as wicked.

Mr. HOAR. O, no; the gentleman from Pennsylvania misunderstood me; I was speaking of that class of claims generally.

Mr. RANDALL. You said this was opening the door to wicked legislation. If that is not discussing the merits of the proposition I do not know what would be.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say that I made no remarks whatever on the particular proposition before the committee. I was speaking of the class of these old claims for expenses in contested-election cases as a wicked class of claims; and I say that a ruling that lets that claim in——

Mr. RANDALL. I am sorry you were not so sensitive about this matter at the last session of Congress.

Mr. HOAR. Will open the door to the admission of a wicked class of claims. I do not mean on the point of order to say anything as to the merits of this particular claim. This is not the time to discuss that.

Mr. RANDALL. I have sent up that paper to be read to enable the Chair to decide the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I cannot see how the merits of the claim can affect the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. This has nothing to do with the merits of the claim. It is a statement of fact as to how this proposition came to be in the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I call the attention of the Chair to the one hundred and twenty-first rule and to the statement in Barclay's Digest on the sixteenth page.

Mr. RANDALL. This was a gross outrage committed on this man. He was duly elected, and it is now confessed on all hands that he was; but in a period of great political excitement in the Forty-first Congress he was unjustly thrown out, notwithstanding that the chairman of the Committee on Elections, who was a republican, reported in his favor.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts still object to the reading of the paper sent to the desk by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Massachusetts does not know what is in the paper.

Mr. HOAR. The gentleman states that the paper contains reasons on behalf of the claim.

Mr. RANDALL. He states no such thing. The point I make on behalf of the reading of that paper is that it contains the reason why this paragraph is inserted in the bill. I do not want the reading of that paragraph to show anything in the least degree as to the merits of this case.

Mr. MCCRARY. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania say that the paper will show either that it is new legislation or that it is in the line of retrenchment?

Mr. RANDALL. I stated that the paper when read will show why this paragraph is inserted in this bill.

Mr. MCCRARY. But will it bring it within the rule?

Mr. RANDALL. That the Chair will decide.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has withdrawn his decision for the purpose of hearing gentlemen on the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not see how the gentleman from Massachusetts can object to the reading of a paper until he knows what is in it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts still object to the reading of the paper?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly; unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania answers the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] in the affirmative.

Mr. CROUNSE. Let the rule be read.

Mr. RANDALL. I must insist on that paper being read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOURTEENTH DISTRICT, NEW YORK,
Committee of Elections, June 19, 1876.

Mr. PAGE. There was objection to the reading of that paper. I believe the objection has not been withdrawn.

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair has overruled the gentleman from Massachusetts in making that objection, and he will certainly overrule the gentleman from California now.

Mr. PAGE. How do you know what the Chair will do?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires the paper to be read for his information, a point of order having been made.

Mr. WILLARD. Is there any objection to the reading of the rule? Cannot the rule be read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paper sent to the desk by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOURTEENTH DISTRICT NEW YORK,
Committee of Elections, June 19, 1876.

Mr. BLACKBURN offered the following:

"Resolved, That Mr. BEEBE, of New York, be instructed to request the Committee on Appropriations, asking that the sum of $3,000 be inserted in the sundry civil service bill, to be paid to George W. Green, of New York, for his expenses incurred as contestee in the case of Van Wyck vs. Green, in the Forty-first Congress, and that the vouchers for such expenditures by Green accompany his communication to said Committee on Appropriations.

"Which was agreed to unanimously."

A true copy from the record.

H. P. COCHRAN, Clerk.

Mr. RANDALL. "Unanimously;" that is the point I want to have on the record.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has got all the information he wants.

At this point Mr. BLACKBURN took the chair as chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLYMER. When I had the honor to occupy the chair temporarily during your absence, Mr. Chairman, a clause in the appropriation bill making an appropriation for the pay of a former contestee being read, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] raised the point of order that it was new legislation and not in the line of retrenchment, and therefore was liable to objection under the one hundred and twentieth rule of the House.

Mr. HOAR. Is it proposed that the gentleman who heard the discussion on the point of order as Chairman shall then take the floor and discuss it as a member?

Mr. CLYMER. I merely desire to state fairly what occurred for the information of the present Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire whether the point of order has been disposed of?

Mr. CLYMER. I would state that without any deliberation on the point of order, and under the advice of the Speaker pro tempore of the House, I decided that the point of order raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts was not well taken. The matter being further discussed, I withdrew my decision in order that it might be discussed for information and mature decision.

That is the present condition of the case. I would state that on reconsideration and after examination of the Journal of the last House, the gentleman from New York, Mr. Boardman Smith, when he desired to pay a contestee, introduced a resolution, which was adopted, making it in order to offer an amendment to the appropriation bill for that purpose. This was held to be necessary. No such resolution has been adopted in this case. I made my decision as chairman hastily, and I was not at the time aware of the precedent I have alluded to. With this information, which I deem it just to communicate to the Chair, I leave the question for his determination.

Mr. HOAR. If this be a meritorious claim which has received the unanimous assent of one or two committees of the House there can certainly be no difficulty in passing it as a separate bill, either by sending it to the Committee of the Whole or by passing it under a suspension of the rules. It seems to me that this is one of the most important securities for the legislation of this body which can be appealed to. It has been the policy of Congress for many years past not to pay any election expenses of contestees, but the House has been in the habit of making such payments to contestants. But the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] introduced a bill or resolution, which was passed when he was chairman of the Committee of Elections, diminishing very much the cases in which payments even of contestants were to be made. Now, sir, it would be wrong to establish a rule for the purpose of paying sitting members whenever their political friends think that the decision of the Committee of Election was clearly wrong.

The number of cases in the past has been very large, and if we establish this principle the drain upon the Treasury will be very large. Every old member of the House knows that the amount of these cases has been very large, in some Congresses amounting to forty or fifty. The contestants in these cases whose claims were not recognized may easily be able to satisfy their political friends in the House that the decisions against them were clearly erroneous.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am quite sure that, although the present occupant of the Chair is shown by what has been read to have had charge of a measure from the Committee of Elections, he is too just and too intelligent to desire to accomplish this purpose which he designs to accomplish by a defiance of the plain rules of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. My object is accomplished in having that paper read. This afternoon when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WARREN] introduced his amendment to pay the executors of Henry Wilson I urged the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] not to raise any point of order. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] knew then that that proposition was as much out of order which he advocated as is this.

Mr. HOAR. The gentleman will permit me to say that I do not think that that amendment was out of order.

Mr. RANDALL. It was not in order, and a point of order was made upon it.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think the point of order was well taken.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Massachusetts was found advocating that proposition. I am only showing the consistency of the gentleman in this respect. I heard no opposition to the proposition made to pay the widow of Mr. James Buffinton, and it came to our committee just as this claim did. It is true that that case came from Massachusetts.

I heard no objections from that side of the House, to their honor be it said, when we proposed to pay the widow of the late Mr. Starkweather. Nor did I find any objections coming from any source to the other three cases. Therefore, having already inserted in this bill several claims upon account of deceased members, together with the additional payment to the executors of Henry Wilson, I thought there was no impropriety in following up what we had done as to others with this payment to a contestee. That is the ground upon which the committee acted. I do not think there is anybody in this House who will charge that the Committee on Appropriations as a body have exhibited too much liberality this winter. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAGE. You are right there.

Mr. RANDALL. I therefore hope that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] will let this case go along with the two cases from Massachusetts and the case from Connecticut.

Mr. HOAR. I should certainly be ashamed to trade off the provision which this House has made for the family of a deceased public officer——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] will remember that we are operating under the five-minute rule, and debate on this point of order seems to have been exhausted

Mr. HOAR. I desire to point out the difference between these two cases, if the Chair will allow me. These provisions relating to the families of deceased public officers dying in office are for the existing year or the next year. The continuance of the salary of a public officer to his family, which would have been provided for in this bill and would have belonged to him for the year had he lived, belongs to that class of subjects connected with the carrying on of the Government for the current fiscal year; it has nothing to do with the cases of contested elections.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels sufficiently advised to rule upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.] It is true, as the gentleman from Massachusetts has suggested, that the present occupant of the chair, as a member of the Committee of Elections, had indorsed the action taken by that committee in the request made of the Committee on Appropriations to insert this clause in this bill. The Chair is decidedly of the opinion, and has no hesitation in expressing that opinion, that the point of order taken by the gentleman from Massachusetts is well taken. The Chair does not conceive that a claim of this character, if the point of order be made and insisted upon, can be excepted from the rule of the House, which would require that it should be brought in in the form of a bill representing a private claim, or else, under the precedents of the House, brought in under a suspension of the rules. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. If the Chair will permit me a moment, I wish to say that I regarded this as so very important a question that I desired to raise the point of order upon it. I now ask leave of the committee, having secured a decision of the Chair, to waive the point of order in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts has been sustained by the Chair.

Mr. RANDALL. This clause had better go out. The decision of the Chair will be a good ruling for taking out other clauses of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] asks leave to waive the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist upon the point of order, because I want to exercise the same right in reference to other clauses of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made to the withdrawal of the point of order, it is sustained by the Chair, and the paragraph is ruled out of the bill.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following:

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay the following-named persons the sums severally due them, namely:

To Adolph Erdman, for clerical services rendered the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, $45.

Mr. JENKS. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions at the rate of $1,800 per annum from the date of his appointment until the close of the Forty-fourth Congress, such sum as shall be sufficient to pay said salary after deducting any amount said clerk shall have already received.

Mr. JENKS. As will be seen by reference to the rule on page 122 of the Digest, the clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions has heretofore received the same compensation as the clerk of the Committee of Claims. There were several committees of this House the clerks of which received a compensation of $2,160 each per annum, and the clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions was one of those clerks.

By reference to page 144 of the Revised Statutes it will be found that this provision of the rule is re-enacted; and upon page 403 of the Revised Statutes there is a clause in the appropriation bill giving the clerk on Invalid Pensions an additional sum of $180; so that the amount received by that clerk last year was $2,340.

The compensation for the labor of any employé of this House should be in proportion to the amount of labor done and care and responsibility assumed by him. The Committee on Invalid Pensions has before it between eleven hundred and twelve hundred bills. Many of the members of this House pay very little attention to many of those bills after they have been sent to the committee. The whole of the labor in examining and preparing those bills must be assumed either by the committee itself or by its clerk.

In regard to a great proportion of those bills the testimony consists merely of the petition accompanying the bill, except in those cases coming from the Pension Bureau. It becomes the duty of the clerk of the committee to write to the claimant in each case for any evidence which will justify the committee in acting favorably upon his claim. Considering that there are over eleven hundred bills before the committee, and that the clerk of the committee has the preparation of every one of these cases for the proper action of the committee, I submit to the House whether there is any other committee of the House whose clerk has an amount of labor to perform at all proportioned to the labor performed by the clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Then, considering the question upon its merits and taking in view the fact that this clerk does as much work as any other clerk in the House, if not more, and that it is useful and necessary work, I ask the House to allow him $1,800 a year from the date of his appointment until the expiration of the Congress.

Mr. HURLBUT. Will the gentleman state for the information of the House what the present compensation of this clerk is?

Mr. JENKS. Five dollars a day, lasting only during the session. But we desire that this clerk shall remain here during the recess in order that in those cases which come here without any evidence except the mere petition or bill, the evidence may be sent for and obtained, so that the cases may be acted on intelligently after the House shall meet next winter. Many bills which are presented cannot be acted upon until this is done. There is scarcely a member of the House who has not a number of bills before the committee in that situation. Hence I ask that this compensation may be allowed as a matter of justice.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I have no hostility to this amendment; but it is my duty to state just what will be its effect. It proposes to make the clerk of this committee a permanent clerk, receiving pay throughout the year. He is now being paid at the rate of $5 per day during the session. The amendment proposes to pay him about the same rate throughout the year.

There is great force in the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. JENKS,] the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, that there is a vast amount of work which may properly be performed by this clerk during the recess; and for one or two years it has been the practice to allow that committee to employ their clerk permanently. But the Committee on Appropriations did not find that to be in accordance with law; and therefore we made no provision for it. With this statement the Committee of the Whole will of course vote as it sees fit.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I move to amend by striking out the last word. I find that there are only five committees whose clerks are legally authorized to be paid by the year; and this clerk is not one of that number. The Committee of Accounts, in consequence of the immense amount of labor which we understood was required to be performed in connection with the Committee on Invalid Pensions, allowed to this clerk the highest rate of pay, $5 a day, which is at the rate of $1,800 a year or $150 a month; but we provided for paying this compensation only during the session. I hope we shall not now commence making a change in this respect; for, if we do, I presume that almost every clerk in the House will request to be continued during the recess.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a vote.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 31, noes 43; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. JENKS, and Mr. WILLIAMS of Indiana were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 44; no quorum voting.

Mr. RANDALL. As there is no quorum present, I suggest, in order to avoid breaking up the committee, that a vote be taken on the amendment in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania suggests that this amendment be passed over informally, that the question upon it be reserved, and a vote taken in the House. If there be no objection, that arrangement will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

To V. H. McCormick, special messenger and watchman to the Select Committee on the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, from June 12 to April 4, 1876, inclusive, at $3.60 per day, $302.40.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend by striking out in the paragraph just read the word "June" and inserting "January."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To E. C. Stevens, for services as folder, rendered during the month of February, 1875, such sum as may be necessary.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend by striking out the words "such sum as may be necessary," and inserting "$100.80."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEAKLEY. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following.

For amount due J. E. W. Thompson for services under the Doorkeeper during the month of July, 1874, $111.60.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to have some explanation of this amendment. It may be right, though it dates back to 1874. I reserve the point of order upon it.

Mr. SHEAKLEY. I see that in the deficiency bill already passed provision is made for the payment of one of four or five folders for whom no appropriation was made at the proper time. The appropriation in the deficiency bill is as follows:

For amount due William M. Long for services under the Doorkeeper during the months of July and August, 1874, $223.25.

I am well satisfied that this amendment is perfectly right, and that this amount ought to be paid.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman say that the amount is due this man; that he performed the work?

Mr. SHEAKLEY. Yes, I know that to be true, for I am acquainted with the case.

Mr. HURLBUT. In what year were these services rendered?

Mr. SHEAKLEY. In 1874.

Mr. HURLBUT. I make the point of order that the amendment is not appropriate to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without discussion, the Chair does not hesitate to sustain the point of order as made by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT.] This case stands on precisely the same ground with the one ruled upon a few moments ago.

The Clerk read as follows:

For folding documents, including pay of folding and materials, for the year ending June 30, 1876, $9,850.

Mr. EDEN. I move to insert after line 54 what I send up to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay for extra clerical service in the Committee on War Claims rendered necessary by the reports of the commissioners of claims, $450.

Also, to enable the Clerk of the House to pay to Henry Thomas for twenty-eight days' service as messenger to the Committee on War Claims, at $2 per day, $56.

Mr. EDEN. I do not propose to antagonize the Committee on Appropriations, and if opportunity had presented itself to me I should have asked to have these items inserted in the bill. It will not do to pay a clerk any more than he ought to have and than what others get. It is not for the purpose of increasing the pay of this clerk, but owing to the fact that the Committee on War Claims have to examine the reports of the commissioners of claims, and there is rendered necessary a large amount of clerical service which cannot be performed by the regular clerk of the committee. This service has been performed by Mr. Everett, who performed the same service in both sessions of the last House, and an appropriation of $500 was made at each session. The work performed at this session is precisely similar to what was performed at both sessions of last Congress.

I will give this committee an idea of this service. This extra clerk made a record of the two reports of the commissioners of claims for 1873 and 1874 for the use of the file clerk of the House of Representatives, about two thousand six hundred rejected cases, and then placed them on the House files. He examined the papers in each of seven hundred and seventy-five allowed cases, fifth report, verifying the computations in each case. After doing this he prepared the appropriation bill. There still remains to be made a record of the seven hundred and eighty-six rejected claims of the fifth report. There were some twelve to fifteen hundred separate bills and petitions referred to the Committee on War Claims, also the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury containing what is known as the 4th of July cases, amounting to five or six hundred; then, too, the reports of the commissioners of claims, including those allowed and those rejected, amounting to between fifteen and sixteen hundred cases.

In order that the committee should act properly in reference to the reports of the commissioners of claims it was necessary that they should have the service of Mr. Everett, the same clerk who acted at both sessions of the last Congress, and he rendered service faithfully and it has occupied half of his time probably during the session.

The last House, I say, allowed him $500 for the last session and $500 for the preceding session. Inasmuch as the Committee on Appropriations has established the precedent of making a reduction of 10 per cent. on all salaries, I have reduced the amount of appropriation in this provision to $450.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I think there is a rule which should guide the House in all such cases. Where a committee of this House has employed in good faith, believing they had a right to do so, any one, and that officer has performed the service under such belief, there is to my mind a propriety in paying him. If such is the case, as I believe it is, I do not of course object to the amendment moved by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. EDEN. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me for a moment to explain the remaining portion of my amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. EDEN. The committee have proposed to pay the messenger of that committee for twenty-eight days' service, which the Committee of Accounts know cannot be paid as it now stands. He served the committee at the rate of $2 a day from the time the committee organized; but the resolution was not introduced in the House for a considerable time, and consequently there are twenty-eight days for which he cannot be paid. This amendment is to pay him for those twenty-eight days at $2 a day, amounting to $56.

Mr. REAGAN. What was the regular clerk doing at the time this clerk was performing this service?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. EDEN. I only desire——

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to strike out the last word, and will yield my time to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. EDEN. As every gentleman who served on the Committee on War Claims knows, the regular clerk could not perform this service at all. It required the assistance of a clerk perfectly familiar with the business of the commissioners of claims in order to do it. The regular clerk, without reference to this particular service, probably had as much business to do as any clerk of any committee of this House, owing to the great amount of business before that committee, and it was utterly impossible from the very nature of the case for the regular clerk to perform this service. It requires a man familiar with the whole business of the commissioners of claims, and it was performed by Mr. Everett, who was perfectly familiar with it, having rendered the same service at both sessions of the last Congress for the Committee on War Claims. Indeed I do not know how the committee could have managed to get along without his service.

Mr. REAGAN. It seems to me if an expert was necessary and was employed, and the clerk could not perform the service required of him in that position, the proper way would have been to discharge the clerk and to have allowed the other to receive the salary. I do not think it is desirable to appoint gentlemen to positions of this kind who are not capable of performing their duties, and letting them hold sinecures, while others are employed to do the duties.

Mr. EDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] wholly misunderstood me. The clerk of that committee is as competent a clerk as the clerk of any committee of this House. This same service was required in the last House when Mr. Smith was clerk of that committee, a gentleman who had had five or six years' experience. It was found to be just as necessary then as it is now. I repeat that the clerk of that committee has had as much service to perform, without reference to that, as the clerk of any committee of this House, unless perhaps the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations. If we had discharged the present clerk, the clerk who performed this duty could not have performed the duties of both clerks. It would have been utterly impossible for him to do so. One clerk could not do the work, and we employed the same clerk as was employed heretofore, for the reason that he was an expert in that class of business.

Mr. REAGAN. This custom of having clerks for committees is a modern institution, and has been carried to an extravagant extent in assigning one clerk to each committee. This is a further step toward multiplying the clerks of committees, and I hope it will not be permitted.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I ask for the reading of the amendment again.

The CHAIRMAN. The formal amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is withdrawn, and the Clerk will report the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN.]

The amendment was again read.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I ask the gentleman from Illinois whether he will not amend his amendment by inserting the name of the person who is to receive this money?

Mr. EDEN. I have no objection to that. The name is S. S. Everett.

Mr. EDEN'S amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEAKLEY. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] informs me that he is willing to withdraw the point of order to the amendment I offered a short time ago. I renew that amendment.

Mr. HURLBUT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHEAKLEY] has shown me that these services have been rendered and that the appropriation is a proper one. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SHEAKLEY'S amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEREFORD. The clerk of the Committee on Commerce served for eight days after he was elected by the committee before he was sworn in. I offer the following amendment:

After the amendment just adopted insert the following:
To S. I. Warren, for clerical services as clerk of the Committee on Commerce, for eight days' services, $40.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph:

That the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, directed to allow credit to the Clerk of the House of Representatives for the sum of $193.46, amount paid John E. Kelly by order of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I offer the following amendment:

After the paragraph just read insert the following:
For the payment of Charles F. Benjamin and Henry H. Smith, for services rendered the Treasury Department in the investigation of the fraudulent claim of Sugg Fort, $500.

These gentlemen were employed by the Secretary of the Treasury to investigate the frauds in the Sugg Fort case. The Secretary of the Treasury is perfectly willing to pay these gentlemen, having employed them; but for the reason that they were employés of the House at the time they made the investigation, and the law therefore intervening, he is unable to pay them, and he recommends Congress to make this appropriation.

Mr. ATKINS. Were they receiving a salary?

Mr. FOSTER. They were clerks on a salary.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 96, noes 16.

Mr. ATKINS. A quorum has not voted.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee make the point of order that a quorum has not voted?

Mr. ATKINS. I do make that point.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] and the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS.]

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 94, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. Inasmuch as this is to pay double salaries, I shall ask for a vote on this amendment in the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I offer the following amendment:

After the amendment just adopted insert the following:
And $60 to pay A. R. Searl for wages as riding-page for the month of December, 1875.

Mr. NEAL. This claim was examined by the Committee of Claims and received their unanimous favorable recommendation. That committee reported a resolution to the House directing the Clerk of the House to pay that sum out of the contingent fund. The resolution was adopted by the House unanimously. The claim is for services rendered by this young man as riding-page in the months of December and January last. The Clerk informs me that owing to some technical construction put upon the law by the officers of the Treasury they are unable to pay the money.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer the following amendment:

After the amendment just adopted insert the following:
To J. B. Summers, for clerical services rendered the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, $92.

Mr. REAGAN. Is that a second clerk of the committee? I ask that the amendment may be read again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I will explain the object of the amendment. This is the clerk of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, and the necessity for the amendment is owing to the fact that this clerk had rendered services for a certain period before taking the oath, the omission of which was entirely by mistake. He rendered the services precisely as if the oath had been taken. My attention as chairman of the committee was not for some time called to the fact that he had not taken the oath. He then took the oath, and this is for the purpose of remunerating him for services as clerk of the committee prior to his taking the oath.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph:

BOTANICAL GARDEN.

For painting, glazing, and repairing the conservatory, buildings, and fences of the Botanical Grounds, $1,500.

Mr. CLYMER. I move to strike out the paragraph just read, relating to the Botanical Garden, and to insert the following:

For painting, glazing, and repairing the conservatory, green-houses, and forcing houses; for extension and repairs of the heating apparatus; for sash and glazing to complete the double glazing on the north side of the conservatory; for filling grounds and raising the fence on the south side of B street; for the erection of iron fence and the erection of porch for the central building on Maryland avenue, and the ceiling of a portion of the rotunda of the conservatory, $3,500.

I have no desire to antagonize any just effort on the part of the committee in the way of retrenchment, and, if I did not believe that it is absolutely necessary for the preservation of the Government property that the amendment I have offered should be adopted, I should be unwilling to urge its adoption.

I have from the Architect of the Capitol a statement in which he says that the sum of $4,500 is necessary for these purposes; it includes $800 for a concrete pavement and $200 for curbing. I do not believe that those two items are absolutely necessary, but, if the Botanical Garden is to be maintained, it is absolutely necessary that the conservatory should be kept in repair, that the green and forcing houses should be perfectly glazed, and the heating-apparatus should be kept in perfect order and be of adequate capacity. Any one who will examine the main building and forcing and green houses will discover that they are in a dilapidated condition; that they need putty, paint, and glass, and for these purposes and for the heating-apparatus and other necessary repairs an appropriation of $3,000, of at least $3,000, is absolutely demanded.

I am not here to say that this establishment is absolutely necessary, but if it is to be maintained we must furnish money enough to maintain it, and in that case it would require at least this amount. I have endeavored to reduce the estimates as made by the Government architect, and in this amendment there is no item that looks to any extension or to any new erection, and if gentlemen have received pleasure from this department, if it has been of any benefit to their constituents, I want them to preserve it. If they care nothing about it I wish them to vote for the amount reported by the Committee on Appropriations; but if they wish to preserve it the amount of the appropriation should be increased at least $2,000.

Mr. RANDALL. It will be remembered that in these economic times we should reduce all the expenditures we can which are unnecessary or in the nature of luxuries. The Committee on Appropriations deem that this Botanical Garden is somewhat in the nature of a luxury; and while they are willing to give something toward keeping it in order, they wanted to be parsimonious in this respect, and therefore they reduced the application of the architect of the Capitol from $3,500 to $1,500.

Mr. CLYMER. I beg leave to say that while in one sense it might be a matter of luxury, yet in another it is keeping up a source of interest and profit not only to us here but to our constituents extending over this broad land.

I would say in justice to this institution that I believe if there is any department of the Government which is managed economically, fairly, and justly, and at the least possible expense considering the amount of work done, it is this. I do not desire to press this matter further on the committee, but I desire to say to the committee that if they wish to keep up this establishment my amendment should be adopted.

The question was taken on Mr. CLYMER's amendment, and it was agreed to, ayes 78, noes not counted.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

Office of the Congressional Printer:

For the Congressional Printer, $3,600; three clerks, at $1,600 each, $4,800; one clerk, $1,300, one clerk to keep accounts of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, $1,200; messenger, $840; in all, $11,740.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. In line 83 I move to strike out all after the word "dollars" down to the word "messenger" in line 84, as follows: "one clerk to keep accounts of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, $1,200." This matter is provided for in line 123, which makes an appropriation for the printing of the debates and proceedings of Congress, and it is unnecessary in this place.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that there is no appropriation made here whatever for the printing necessary for the Supreme Court and the Court of Claims.

Mr. RANDALL. Both of those items will be provided for in the proper place. The chairman of the Committee on Printing will offer an amendment, placing one at $10,000 and the other at $5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly; then I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Ohio will remember that the estimates for this work were sent to the Committee on Appropriations and by them referred to the Committee on Printing. For some reason the Committee on Printing did not report them back to the Committee on Appropriations.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For printing and binding for the State Department, $15,000; for the Treasury Department, $180,000; for the War Department, $72,000; for the Navy Department, $39,000; for the Interior Department, $135,000; for the Agricultural Department, $9,000; for the Department of Justice, $6,000; for the Post-Office Department, $105,000; for the Congressional Library, $15,000; in all, $576,000.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I offer the following amendment to the clause just read:

Insert the following:

For the Supreme Court of the United States, $10,000: Provided, That the record in all cases in which the Government is not a party shall be printed at the expense of the parties thereto.

For the Court of Claims, $5,000: Provided, That the records for the claimants in said courts shall be printed at the cost of such claimants: And provided further, That the clerk of the Supreme Court and the clerk of the Court of Claims shall administer such oaths to private printers who shall execute such work as said courts may deem necessary.

Mr. LYNDE. I move to amend that amendment by striking out $10,000 for the printing of the Supreme Court and inserting in lieu thereof $20,000, and by striking out $5,000 for the Court of Claims and inserting $10,000.

Mr. Chairman, for several years past, last year certainly—I have not looked back to the time before that, before last year—$25,000 was appropriated for printing for the Supreme Court, and I think that $20,000 is as small a sum as can possibly answer the purpose for the printing for that court. Every case presented is printed, and the decisions of the court are printed on slips, and they dispose of three hundred cases per year, and the printing of those decisions alone has amounted to over $10,000; at ordinary rates $20,000 is as low a sum as I think they can possibly get along with.

The appropriation last year for the Court of Claims was $10,000. Every case presented to that court and the testimony in the case must be printed for the court, and $10,000 is not more than is needed for that purpose.

We certainly are desirous of placing no obstacle in the way of a proper administration of justice in these courts. I would be glad, indeed, if we could get along with the sum named by the chairman of the Committee on Printing; but I am satisfied that we cannot.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. From an examination made of this subject during the past winter I am satisfied that the necessary printing for the Supreme Court, for which the United States should pay, can be done for the sum of $10,000. The same examination satisfies me thoroughly that $5,000 will pay for the printing of all the records and other matters required by the Court of Claims. I am supported in that opinion by a conversation had to-day with one of the gentlemen connected with that court.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of inquiring if it is not true that private litigants have to pay for printing their records?

Mr. LYNDE. Parties litigant in the Supreme Court have never been taxed for the printing of their cases; they are only taxed for the copy which is given by the clerk to the Printer, but they have never been taxed for printing the cases.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say that in a case which I tried lately in the Supreme Court I was charged $200 for printing the record of the case.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. LYNDE to the amendment of Mr. VANCE, of Ohio; and upon a division there were—ayes 47, noes 66.

No further count being called for, the amendment was declared to be rejected.

Mr. McCRARY. I ask that the amendment be again read, in order that I may fully understand the purpose of the provisos.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

For the Supreme Court of the United States, $10,000: Provided, That the record in all cases in which the Government is not a party shall be printed at the expense of the party thereto; for the Court of Claims, $5,000: provided, That the records for claimants in said court shall be printed at the cost of such claimants: And provided further, That the clerk of the Supreme Court and the clerk of the Court of Claims shall administer such oaths to private printers who may execute such work as such courts may deem necessary.

Mr. REAGAN. Why is that proviso put in, it being true that suitors must deposit money for the printing of their records?

Mr. RANDALL. This amendment comes from the Committee on Printing, and the chairman of that committee will state the reason for it.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. It appears that this matter has not been clearly defined in the past, and the object of this amendment is to make it clear and distinct.

Mr. McCRARY. I desire to say a word in favor of striking out the two provisos, and I move to amend the amendment to that extent. I do not understand that the practice now is that private parties shall pay for the printing of the records in cases taken to the Supreme Court. There is no law and no rule of that kind that I know anything about. I have no kind of doubt but that the adoption of these provisos will work a very great hardship, almost an entire prohibition upon taking a great many cases to the Supreme Court. The cost of printing the record is often a very large item of expense, and if the litigant happens to be a poor man, it may well happen that he will be wholly unable to pay the expense of this printing.

This printing is for the benefit of the court. It is as much a matter of public printing which ought to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States as the printing of the bills that are on file to-day on our desks. It is not for the litigant; it is not for the convenience of the litigant; it is to enable the Supreme Court of the United States, one of the departments of this Government, to discharge its duties and transact its business with reasonable facility and within a reasonable time. To put the cost of this printing, which is in every sense of the word public printing, for the benefit of the public in the cause of the speedy administration of justice—to put the cost of this printing upon the litigants who go to that court is an injustice and a hardship, a departure from the practice which has heretofore prevailed in that court. I hope that the provisos will be stricken out.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCRARY] if he has had occasion to file records upon appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. McCRARY. I have.

Mr. REAGAN. Have not litigants in those cases been obliged to deposit money for the printing of the records?

Mr. McCRARY. There is a fee, I believe, for one copy of the record, but there is no requirement of the law and no rule of the court which requires the litigant to pay the cost of the printing.

Mr. REAGAN. Not having examined the law, I will state a single item of personal experience. In taking a case to the Supreme Court last fall I was notified by the clerk of the circuit court that before the case could be filed it would be necessary for me to deposit with the clerk of the Supreme Court $200 to pay for printing the record. The record remained here for some time before it was filed, and I had to bring that money and deposit $200 to pay for printing the record before the clerk of the Supreme Court would file the papers.

Mr. McCRARY. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] must have been improperly advised.

Mr. REAGAN. I was first notified by the clerk of the circuit court, and next by the clerk of the Supreme Court.

Mr. McCRARY. The amount usually deposited, $250, is to cover the costs, not simply to pay for the printing.

Mr. REAGAN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to strike out the last word. I say that I am not mistaken. The office of the Supreme Court is not far from here; and any gentleman who will take the trouble to go there will find that he cannot have his transcript filed unless he pays the money for printing at the time of filing it. In the case which I have already mentioned the party was a very poor man, and he was put to some trouble to raise the money for printing that record.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. McCRARY, it was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, as amended.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, the amount ought to be increased. I move to amend by making it $18,000 for the Supreme Court.

The amendment of Mr. FOSTER was not agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BALLOU. I move to amend, as follows:

At the end of line 122, add the following:

Provided, That any surplus in either the appropriations for printing or for binding may, if necessary, be applied to meet any deficiency in the other branch of the work.

Mr. Chairman, I will explain the object of this amendment, which perhaps would have been more appropriate at the end of line 111. The amounts expended for printing and binding vary considerably, so that, a definite sum being appropriated for each, it may happen that with respect to one class of work the whole appropriation may be expended, while as to the other a large balance may remain. Without some amendment of this kind the work of either class must stop as soon as the appropriation for that specific work is exhausted. The object of the amendment is that if any portion of the appropriation for printing or for binding should remain it may be used for either class of work in which there may be a deficiency.

Mr. RANDALL. That amendment destroys, as to money which may be expended for public printing, the responsibility which should attach to each Department. I think that the amounts have been carefully considered by the Committee on Printing, guided by past experience. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will not prevail.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I desire to ask a question of the chairman of the committee; and for the purpose of doing so I move to strike out the last word. I notice that in this section there is appropriated for printing for the Agricultural Department $9,000. I wish to inquire whether that is supposed to be sufficient for printing the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture?

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. That is not provided for in this paragraph; it is provided for elsewhere.

Mr. MILLER. Is it provided for in another bill? Will the chairman of the committee give us the information?

Mr. RANDALL. It is provided for elsewhere.

Mr. MILLER. In this bill?

Mr. RANDALL. It is provided for in the various items of this bill.

Mr. MILLER. The appropriation to which I refer is for printing for the Agricultural Department, and this would seem to be the proper place to provide for printing that report.

Mr. RANDALL. This is intended to cover the expenses of blanks, letter-heads, books for keeping accounts of the Department, seed-labels, &c. The printing of the monthly reports and the general annual report is provided for in various amounts in other places; for instance, in the appropriations for wages, and for binding, and various other items which have preceded this item. This appropriation relates to the printing required by the Department for the transaction simply of the Bureau business.

Mr. MILLER. I understand that last year in this very place—in the appropriation for printing for the Agricultural Department—$75,000 was appropriated. I am so informed by a member of the last House. It is understood by some gentlemen around me that it is not the intention to print the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture. If that is so, we wish to understand it.

Mr. FOSTER. It has been stated by the gentleman who just occupied the floor [Mr. MILLER] that it is not the intention to print the Agricultural Report. I call upon the chairman of the Committee on Printing to state whether that is a fact.

Mr. RANDALL. I believe that some further legislation is required by both branches of Congress before the Agricultural Report can be printed.

Mr. FOSTER. We want to understand that.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I will state for the information of gentlemen that it requires concurrent action of the two Houses to print the Agricultural Report. This appropriation, as I understand it, is designed to be under the control of the head of that Department for the printing expenses of the Bureau. He certainly has no authority to print his annual report out of this appropriation, and it has not been done in that way.

Mr. HARRISON. I move to strike out the last word, in order that I may read a paragraph from last year's report.

It says here, for the Agricultural Department, $15,000. There was no $75,000.

Mr. FORT. There was a special provision put in.

Mr. HARRISON. This is last year's bill.

Mr. HURLBUT. On that I should like to know explicitly from the committee whether or not in the total amount given, page 5, $1,115,737.50 for printing, it is intended to include the printing of the Agricultural Report?

Mr. RANDALL. That embraces money enough to print more than we expect to have done during the entire year. If Congress shall see fit to be excessive in ordering printing, of course there will be a deficiency. But I think that will not be the case. I believe this Congress will not order an excessive amount of printing.

Mr. HURLBUT. Has the committee estimated in that sum for printing the Agricultural Report or not?

Mr. RANDALL. We put in that amount, $1,115,737.50, what we believe to be sufficient to print everything Congress shall order.

Mr. FORT. As I understand it the provisions made in this bill are only sufficient for the printing of the usual number of Agricultural Reports to be distributed by the Department of Agriculture, but not for the purpose of the printing of Agricultural Reports to be distributed generally by members of Congress. If we desire to print enough Agricultural Reports for general distribution among the people by members of Congress, of course we should provide for it here.

Mr. RANDALL. O, no; this is enough for everything. This Congress so far has not been extravagant in ordering the printing of books.

The CHAIRMAN. This debate is all out of order, not even a formal amendment being pending.

Mr. FORT. Other gentlemen have been debating it.

The CHAIRMAN. But on amendments on which debate is now exhausted.

Mr. FORT. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That has been offered now three times.

Mr. FORT. Then I move to strike out all of it. [Laughter.] If the gentleman comes to make a calculation he will find that the appropriation last year provided for enough Agricultural Reports to be distributed by the Commissioner of Agriculture to his correspondents. He has his correspondents in every county. He has those to whom he sends his reports. But you will find not one single report will be delivered to members of Congress to be distributed by them under the appropriation here made; and it is a question the House might as well understand now as at any other time. If they wish to have the report distributed by the Commissioner of Agriculture, all right; but if they wish to have several hundred thousand printed for distribution by members of Congress among the people, then it will take $75,000 or $80,000 to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his motion to strike out?

Mr. FORT. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Chair will instruct the Clerk to insert in line 122, instead of $576,000, $591,000, so as to include the $10,000 for the records of the Supreme Court and $5,000 for the records of the Court of Claims, inserted by vote of the committee in order to make the summing up correct.

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly; let that be done.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For debates and proceedings of Congress, $100,000: Provided, That from and after the passage of this act it shall be the duty of the Government Printer to pay no greater price for labor performed by printers, book-binders, and other employés in the Government Printing Office for each hour's work or piece-work than the average price paid for an hour's work or for piece-work of the same description in the cities of New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore; nor shall it be lawful for him to employ any workmen not thoroughly skilled in their respective branches of industry, as shown by a trial of their skill under his direction; and whenever it becomes necessary for the Government Printer to make purchases of materials not already due under contracts, he shall prepare a schedule of the articles required, showing the description, quantity, and quality of each article, and shall invite proposals for furnishing the same, either by advertisement or circular, as the Joint Committee on Public Printing may direct, and shall make contracts for the same with the lowest bidder, making a return of the same to the Joint Committee on Public Printing, showing the number of bidders, the amounts of each bid, and the awards of the contracts.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I move to amend by striking out all after the last word in line 125 to and including the word "to" in line 131, and by striking out the word "any" in line 131 and inserting the word "no" in lieu thereof.

The provision in the bill is intended to reduce the compensation paid to employés of the Government Printing Office, or rather to regulate that compensation by what is paid to similar employés in the cities of New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. I am informed, Mr. Chairman, that if this paragraph becomes a law the wages of the employés of the Government Printing Office will be reduced from 30 to 40 per cent. This reduction is a direct contravention of the policy adopted by the Committee on Appropriations in all the appropriation bills which have been before the House. The rule laid down by the committee and acted on by this House was to reduce all salaries above $1,200 10 per cent. That rule was adhered to except in two cases. No one receiving a salary less than $1,200 had his compensation interfered with by any legislation which has taken place on any appropriation bill in this House. I say this is making a distinction between the clerical force of the Government and the mechanical force of the Government. The latter, when it has performed honest labor, receives less than $1,200 a year. There are few in the Government Printing Office who receive that amount of compensation.

Yet this amendment is intended to reduce them still further than the clerical force has been reduced. There are good reasons, Mr. Chairman, why that should not be done, and there are good reasons why their compensation should not be compared with the compensation of similar workmen in the cities of Baltimore, New York, and Philadelphia. It is well known to all of us that the expense of living here is much higher than it is in those cities. It is also known to us that the persons employed in the Government Printing Office do not get steady work. They are only employed when the work is furnished to them by the Departments and the two branches of Congress.

This paragraph proposes that they shall not receive any more by the hour than the average price paid for an hour's work in the cities of New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. Now, in this District they labor but eight hours a day; whereas in the other cities named they work from ten to fifteen hours. Therefore if their wages——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DUNNELL. I trust that the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be adopted by the committee. I wish to ask the attention of the committee to some facts additional to those which have been so well presented by the gentleman who has introduced the amendment.

It will be recollected that in the last Congress the same attempt was made to reduce the pay of these Government printers. That attempt was not successful, as I hope this will not be. It ought not to be forgotten that these Government printers are here in Washington, a very large proportion of them with families dependent upon them for support. It is proposed by this bill to reduce their pay from $4 a day to $2.40. The average pay in the cities cited in the bill is about $18 a week. That will give about $70 a month, or in that neighborhood. Here is a very large reduction.

These are Government employés, and they ought to enjoy the benefit of the eight-hour law as much as any other class of Government employés. These men are compelled to be at their places promptly on time and to remain all the time that is allowed them to work, while at the same time they have not the privileges which the other employés of the Government have here in Washington. They have no holidays. They have no privilege at all, but are compelled to work every day. And it is now proposed in the presence of these other employés of the Government who work but six, seven, and eight hours--it is proposed to compel them absolutely to work ten hours a day in order to get the same compensation. There is no use in denying the fact that it is more expensive to live here than it is to live in the cities which are named in this paragraph.

The amendment should be adopted. If the paragraph is passed without amendment it will make an invidious distinction between this class of men and the other employés of the Government.

It will be noticed further down in this bill that the Public Printer is required to employ only those who are thoroughly skilled. Now, it is proposed to require the Public Printer to employ only skilled workmen and in the same bill you reduce their pay from $4 a day down to $2.40.

Gentlemen on the other side of the House have talked in the interest of the laboring-man, in the interest of those who are compelled to work. If there be anywhere a class of men in the employ of this Government who earn all the money they get, and earn it faithfully, it is these men who work in the Public Printing Office. [Applause in the galleries.] And it is known, Mr. Chairman, that there are periods when they are without work. They are then compelled to do without work. And in this instance it will be an act of clear injustice to attempt a reduction of the pay of this class of workmen far beyond the reduction meted out to any other class of Government employés.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. The Government Printing Office is paying to-day sixty cents per thousand ems and fifty cents per hour, or at the rate of $4 per day—$24 per week—for type-setters and certain other employés in the office. At the same time men equally skilled in their profession, who have spent just as many years in learning the art of printing and binding, are working in the city of Washington at fifty cents per thousand ems, or forty cents per hour. Now, I have yet to learn that this Congress ought to pay more for labor in the Public Printing Office than is paid to equally skilled labor elsewhere in the city of Washington. It should not make a discrimination between workmen of equal skill.

The argument is advanced that there is not steady work there. This matter of steady work depends entirely upon the Congressional Printer. He can say whether or not men shall have steady work, and need not employ in his office more men than are necessary. I know that at various times of the year he is much crowded with work; but at those times, in the exercise of that good judgment and discretion that should belong to an officer of the Government having such vast responsibilities on his hands, he should call to his aid extra help. And when that is done he should let that help go and keep the regular hands in his employment.

I say it is setting a bad example all over the nation to have this Government pay more than private employers; to make itself a close corporation and to regulate prices of labor not only here but elsewhere. A few minutes since I heard a gentleman say in a casual remark that it was difficult to ascertain what was paid in New York, Baltimore, and Philadelphia. It is not at all difficult to tell. The average price can be obtained at any time within an hour. And further, if these gentlemen are not satisfied with what wages they get there, it is very easy for them to resign and give their places to others who understand the business perfectly as well as they do and who would be glad to get them.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Have not many of these printers here wives and families to support?

Mr. RANDALL. Do not Philadelphia printers have wives and families too?

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. The want of employment at particular times is no more here than elsewhere. That matter can be most thoroughly and perfectly regulated.

Mr. MUTCHLER. Is it not a fact that the Government printers here in Washington have to pay more for their subsistence than printers who live elsewhere?

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I think not.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; I think I can live as cheaply here as I can in Philadelphia.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I move to strike out the last word.

This is not a new question. It has often before been agitated in Congress.

The Committee on Appropriations inserted this proposition at the instance of the Committee on Printing; but I do appeal to this House that when they come to vote upon this question they will decide it upon its merits, and not in consequence of applause in the galleries, or disagreement, or reflection from the galleries, or from any organized body whatever. I say here with great regret that I see an effort made to control action on this floor by applause in the galleries.

Now, sir, this proposition is either right or wrong, and it suggests to my mind one single proposition, and that is whether the Government should go into cities, into the walks of life, and employ printers at the same rates that private citizens employ them in private establishments. Is there any valid reason why men should be paid more by the Government than is paid by the owners of private printing establishments in the very city where we have this Government Printing Office?

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. It is not true that the printers of New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore work all the year around, and thus receive a larger compensation than the printers here do?

Mr. RANDALL. Is it not also true that these printers here can seek employment in those cities when they are idle here, and is it not also true that printers from those cities seek employment in the Government Printing Office?

Now, these things regulate themselves on the principle of the law of supply and demand. When there is a demand here the printers come here. When there is no demand here they go elsewhere.

I have had applications from printers in my own city to obtain employment here, and when they did not get employment here they would go back to Philadelphia and seek employment there. But I rose more particularly to express my hope that in the treatment of this question the House will not be swayed in its judgment by popular applause in the galleries.

Mr. HOSKINS. For one I am in full accord with the gentleman who offered the amendment to strike out so much of the proviso as reduced the pay of the Government printers. It has been the policy of this Congress, through the action of the Committee on Appropriations, to reduce all salaries at the rate of 10 per cent. where the salaries were above $1,200 per year. These Government printers are now receiving less, or at least not more, than $1,200 a year. They are now receiving at the rate of $24 per week, and, counting three hundred working days in the year, which is as much as any Government printer can be expected to work, the salary paid to the printers is only $1,200 a year. The proposition of the Committee on Appropriations is to reduce the compensation of every printer in the Government Printing Office who now receives a compensation of $24 a week to an annual compensation of $750. These Government printers are men who are fixtures here in the city of Washington, as much so as any clerk in a Department, with wives and families; and I appeal to every gentleman on the floor if any man with a family to support can live in the Government employ at $750 a year. The law fixes the hours of labor at eight hours a day, and the committee propose to pay these printers the average compensation paid to printers in the cities of New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. The hours of labor in those cities are ten hours a day, and compositors receive on an average about $19 a week for ten hours' service per day, which is $76 per month; and you propose to make the daily compensation of these printers at $2.50 a day, which, calculated at the rate of three hundred laboring days in the year, makes the compensation $750 a year.

Now, every clerk in the Departments has thirty days to himself in the shape of a holiday or vacation annually; but the Government printers are not entitled to one hour's vacation.

It is very well known that when a clerk is sick for a day or a week his salary goes on. But when a Government printer goes to his case in the morning five minutes late, one hour is deducted from his day's pay.

I say to gentlemen here that it is not a fair comparison to make between this city and other cities. Everybody knows that this is not a city of manufactures, commerce, or trade. Its population is made up almost entirely of Government employés. Every man on this floor knows that both in regard to these employés and to members of Congress the prices which must be paid here for everything are such as tend to increase the amount required for their support. This is not like other cities, not like any other city on the face of the continent. The price of living in every respect, either of a member of Congress or a Department clerk, is higher here than in the city of Baltimore or in other cities.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOSKINS. Allow me a moment more.
Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say a few words.
Mr. RANDALL. I call for a vote on the amendment.
Mr. KELLEY. I move to strike out the last two words.
Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.
Mr. BANKS. For what purpose?
Mr. RANDALL. I desire to have debate closed on this amendment.
Mr. BANKS. We do not want it closed; you have had your talk, let us have ours.
The motion that the committee rise was not agreed to.
Mr. KELLEY. Before proceeding to the discussion of the question, I desire to say that I concur with my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. RANDALL,] in what he has said about the action of the galleries. It is always improper, and on a local question like this peculiarly so.
I was a little amused at the comparison made between the wages paid printers in the Government Printing Office and the wages paid "in the town of Washington" somewhere—the Government Printing Office, the finest printing office in the world, that establishment in which precise printing can be the most quickly done of any establishment in the world. I had occasion recently to have some pages of the French tariff set up, in which were the most minute fractions. There is no other establishment that I know of in this country that could have put that up, or, having the material, could have put it up in a week. Yet in the Government Printing Office it was put up during the night after the copy was left there. The words that will be uttered latest here to-night will be well printed and laid upon our desks to-morrow morning.
The very proviso of this amendment requires that none but first-class workmen, who shall have proved their skill under observation, shall be employed in the Government Printing Office. Yet their wages are to be compared to the wages of compositors who set up the type for a village newspaper "in the town of Washington." [Laughter.] I protest against settling this great question by any such comparisons as these.
Sir, if the eight-hour law is to be repealed, let it be done by express statute, and not in this left-handed way; for this is a virtual repeal of the eight-hour law as to printing in the District of Columbia. No, gentlemen, if we are ready to repeal that law, let us do it in terms. Who will make the motion? Not I, sir; not I.
Would you regulate the wages of these skilled workmen by the wages of workmen in Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, in a time of depression unparalleled in our history, when skilled workmen seek a refuge in the house of correction; when thousands are unemployed and will work for the fifty cents a day they get in Washington, (I think that was the statement, or perhaps it was fifty cents for a thousand ems, or something of that sort;) a time when men to keep shelter over wife and children—or, as I know some skilled workmen living in this very city now, to give them bread and sirup twice a day seven days in the week. Who shall go forth on behalf of this Government and learn how cheaply these men will work, and to say that what their necessities will compel them to take shall be the wages of the most skilled printers of the world in the Government Printing Office?
[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. HEREFORD. I feel a little surprised at the remarks that have just fallen from the lips of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] who has just taken his seat. He announced the other day to this House that in a certain city in the State of Indiana there were some fourteen thousand workmen, out of twenty-six thousand, I believe, who were living upon garbage. Yet to-night he tells us that you must give men more than $1,000 or $1,200 a year that they may live here. He says that to-day there are fourteen thousand people in Indianapolis living upon garbage.
Mr. KELLEY. Not that; but what I told was the truth.
Mr. HEREFORD. He told us the other day that there were fourteen thousand people in Indianapolis living upon garbage.
Mr. KELLEY. I said that there were fourteen thousand people out of employment, and some of them living on garbage.
Mr. HEREFORD. He said there were 14,000 out of 26,000 who were thrown out of employment, and many of them were living upon garbage. Why? Because the people in this country are taxed to death.
During ten years past, as I had occasion to say the other day, $5,000,000,000 has been collected from the people; yet our debt is over $2,000,000,000. It is because the people are taxed to death. Yet when this Committee on Appropriations proposes to-night, as it has upon every occasion, to reduce those taxes, to prevent those men from "living upon garbage," my friend from Pennsylvania rises in his seat and says you must tax them more, although if you tax them more, still more will they "live upon garbage." I want them to have as fair and reasonable wages as men get throughout the length and breadth of this country. But I say to gentlemen on either side of the House when you go to your homes how many men and women do you find there who are "teaching the young idea how to shoot," who are teaching in your schools, and who would be glad to get $1,000 or $1,200 a year? Yet my friend from Pennsylvania, who is so much opposed to "garbage," says that is not enough.
Mr. KELLEY. Do you like garbage? [Laughter.]
Mr. HEREFORD. No, sir; I do not like "garbage." [Renewed laughter.] But I want to reduce the taxes of this country, so that one part of our people shall not be millionaires, while the others are eating "garbage." I want to equalize matters. That is my reason for opposing the amendment to increase the appropriation recommended by the committee.
[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. KELLEY. I withdraw the formal amendment.
Mr. BANKS. I renew it. It seems to me that the just objection to this proposition in regard to the printers is that it undertakes to apply to them a rule which we do not apply to any other officers or employés of the Government. In regard to these men, we have sent out into other cities—Philadelphia, Baltimore, New York—to ascertain what shall be paid to officers and workmen of the Government here in Washington. We do not apply this test to any other class of public servants. We have never sent out into the city of Baltimore or Washington or New York to ascertain what men received there for such services as we perform here. We do not undertake to be guided by any such test in fixing our own pay.
In the city of Boston there was a bank cashier for whose pardon from imprisonment application was made not long since by every officer of the bank upon which he had committed a defalcation. But the defalcation was one which he confessed himself, which no one would have known if he had not admitted it. When he came to close his accounts he confessed to his employers what he had done. He was receiving a salary too meager to support himself and his family from day to day, and in order to save that family from hunger he abstracted funds of the bank, little by little, in amounts which nobody missed. When these men discovered what they had been paying this cashier in the city of Boston they all agreed in asking for his pardon.
Why do we not send to the city of Boston, the city of New York, or the city of Baltimore to ascertain what starving clerks are paid there, and why do we not intrust the interests of this Government to men who will work for the same compensation? We know that such a policy would not answer. It is not a rule that would succeed. The Government must have not only able and prompt men, but reliable men, men of integrity, such as the ordinary occupations and employments in which young men are engaged do not require.
What have these printers done that the gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations should enter upon a hunt against them? If they have been applauding anybody here, certainly it is an indiscretion; but most of the gentlemen here get what little reputation they have from the applause of the galleries. [Laughter.] I have heard gentlemen say again and again that never at any previous session has the practice of the galleries applauding prevailed as it has at this; and certainly, in my twenty years' experience, I never saw men who liked it any better that the members of this House. [Laughter.]
Why should we adopt in reference to these printers a rule or method of regulating compensation different from that which is applied to all other officers? Is it because these men are workmen? Is it because they are mere laborers? Do the gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations strike against these men because they are laborers, because they are workmen? Why, sir, they are officers of the Government as much as we are or as much as the officers of the Executive Departments. These printers are officers upon whose skill and fidelity the House is absolutely dependent for the correctness of its printed proceedings.
Now, let me call the attention of gentlemen to what other men have done: Thirty-six years ago Mr. Van Buren, as the head of the executive branch of the Government, set an example which since that time has never been disapproved by anybody. It was that the Government of the United States should cut down the time of labor from twelve or fourteen hours a day to ten hours a day. For thirty-six years that has been the wise rule of the Government of the United States, which has been adopted by every State and in almost every branch of private business.
[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to learn that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] has on this occasion made one exception to the uniform rule of his life. As a member of Congress, so far as I have observed his career, he has always been the most devoted to the interests of his constituents of any of the members on this floor. But to-night I see that he is advocating higher wages for the printers in the District of Columbia than are paid in the city of Philadelphia, which he has the honor to represent upon this floor. I think in that respect the gentleman is departing from the uniform rule of his life. He has been faithful in representing the interest, as he calls it, of labor, but to some it would appear, at least to me, his efforts in behalf of labor tend to favor the few great manufacturers at the expense of the laboring millions. He advocates the great fallacy of the protectionists, which is this: That the more you tax the people the richer they will get. He is for a high protective tariff upon all articles which the people of this country consume, and hopes to make them rich and prosperous by taxing them to death.
Now, Mr. Chairman, something has been said about the great reduction proposed by the appropriation bills which have been passed by this House. In this respect I think the Committee on Appropriations have performed a work which entitles them to the gratitude of the laboring-men and the tax-payers of this country. I believe our Committee on Appropriations and this House will receive the thanks and the gratitude of the people when our work is finished and submitted to them.

I have before me, Mr. Chairman, a carefully prepared estimate of the appropriation bills which have passed this House and the one now pending, and I will send it to the reporters and have it printed as a portion of my remarks. It includes the appropriations made by bills passed as well as those in the bill pending, and when this table has been examined in detail it will appear that, although the officers in the various Executive Departments of this Government have estimated the amounts they desired for the ensuing year at $203,000,000 for the purpose of paying the necessary expenses of the Government, this committee and this House have reduced those estimates down to $138,000,000, being a reduction of $64,000,000 in the appropriations below the estimates made by the various Executive Departments of the Government.

It will be seen also by this table that although the appropriations for the current fiscal year were $177,000,000 and upward, the appropriations made this year, as appears by the bills already passed and by the one now pending, are only $138,000,000, being a reduction for the next fiscal year over the current fiscal year of $39,421,964.50. Here we have, then, as the work of this committee and of this House, a saving in expenditure to the tax-payers and to the laborers of the country of nearly $40,000,000 annually.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the table be published with my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

The table referred to by Mr. SPRINGER is as follows:

Statement of appropriation bills passed by the House of Representatives at the present session of Congress, showing the estimates of the Departments for each bill; the amounts appropriated for the ensuing year ending June 30, 1877, by this House; the reductions made in each bill below the estimates, and the reductions made by this House below the amounts appropriated for the present year.

* If passed as reported.

Mr. BANKS. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. I renew it, and yield my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Chairman, I was speaking a moment ago of the ten-hour rule having been established by Mr. Van Buren and the democratic party in 1839 and its successful operation for some thirty-six years. Now, eight years ago the present head of the Government issued his proclamation, under instructions of the two Houses of Congress, that for all persons employed under the Government of the United States eight hours should be a day's labor. It has operated for eight years. Congress has never reversed that rule. The President has never asked the two Houses of Congress to reverse it. It stands as the law of the land for all employés and laborers under the Government of the United States. Why should we select the printers of this city as the only employés and laborers to be excepted from that beneficent and wise rule? I say it is beneficent, because if it be properly executed it will bring to the service of the Government here and every other Department of the Government the best workmen that can be obtained in this or any other country. Why should we except the printers alone from the operation of this wise and beneficent and democratic rule or law? Certainly if there is anybody entitled to it they are entitled to it.

While I say I am for economy and reduction of the expenditures of the Government, I do not believe it is necessary or wise or just to strike at the laboring portion of the population. Especially it is not wise to strike at any particular class of men employed by the Government, and that is what we do by the passage of this proposition. It is a repeal of the law of the United States regulating the hours of labor, a wise and just law to which there has been no objection, and to which in a little time all occupations will conform, not to the detriment or loss of the people of the country, but to their benefit. It is following in that wise series of laws which secure to the laboring-men their homesteads, their furniture, their tools, their right to vote, and their right to all the blessings under a free government. This is exactly one of its principles, and one which has produced as many good results as any other. Why should we strike down this law as regards this one class of workmen and leave it applicable to every other class of workmen employed by the Government of the United States?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, rose.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that debate close on this paragraph.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. Will not the gentleman yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. RANDALL. If the chairman of the Committee on Printing desires to speak, I withdraw for the present the request that debate close on this paragraph.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I shall not occupy more than a moment or two.

I have no desire to disparage the Government Printing Office. The gentleman from Pennsylvania very well says that its appointments are magnificent, and that it was prepared to execute work with facility and in good order. But at the same time it is but proper to say that the Government of the United States has placed at the disposal of this office all that money could buy in the shape of type and presses. It is also proper to say that the work done in the Government Printing Office, as a class, does not require the most skillful labor. And I beg to impress this upon the gentlemen who have advocated most strongly the present system of payment; the class of work done there does not require the most skillful labor. There are in the United States not less than two hundred offices whose work requires better printers, as a class, than are needed in this office. And I say this from a practical knowledge of the business myself, and after a careful inquiry into it in all its branches.

This is no doubt a very fine office; and the statement has been made here that it has drawn to Washington the better class of printers of the country. In reference to that I say without fear of successful contradiction that of those employed in the Government Printing Office to-day there is a greater number of incompetent men than can be found in any establishment in the United States employing an equal number. The average of incompetent men in the Government Printing Office is greater in proportion to the number employed. And why? I am casting no reflection upon the chief of the office when I make this assertion. It is simply because he is in a certain sense bound by the rules that govern politicians generally, and must put in men there at the dictation of Senators and members of Congress. There are to-day men there who in a respectable Philadelphia office or in a respectable Baltimore or New York establishment could not earn $10 per week.

Mr. FORT. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. Are not these printers paid by the piece?

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. A few of them are; a few.

Mr. FORT. Is it not a fact that the majority of them are so paid?

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. No, sir; the great proportion of the printers in the Government Printing Office are paid by the week.

Mr. FORT. Are they paid for incompetent work? Do they not do competent work?

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. Under the rules of the establishment, a number of them are not required to earn what they get.

Mr. FORT. The gentleman from Ohio is chairman of the Committee on Printing. I do not understand why he has not investigated that before now.

Mr. RANDALL. He has.

Mr. HOSKINS. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. If it does not come out of my time I will.

Mr. RANDALL. Of course it comes out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I do not yield.

A statement has been made to-night that this establishment comes under the rule adopted by the Committee on Appropriations to make no reduction of compensation less than $1,200 per annum. I cannot see how it comes under that rule. These men are hired there and discharged at the option of the Government Printer, and according to the statement which has been made here some of them are furloughed during a part of the year, their services not being required.

Mr. FORT. Do they get pay for the time they are furloughed?

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. No, sir. No statement to that effect has been made. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, the eight-hour law has been brought into this discussion. Now, there is not a gentleman here who is acquainted with the working of the Government Printing Office who does not know——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I would like a few moments more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. It is not in the power of the Chair to extend it.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana, was recognized, and yielded a portion of his time to Mr. VANCE, of Ohio.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I find the time goes more rapidly than I thought.

The simple proposition is that the Government of the United States shall not lend itself as an agent to bolster up the salaries of these men to the detriment of workmen of a like class in other parts of the country. There are great numbers of men all over this land, skilled in this profession or art of printing, who would be glad to come here and do the work at the rates proposed and at the rates paid in the city of Washington outside of the Government Office.

Now, one word further. I do not object to the galleries cheering this proposed amendment. Not at all. These gentlemen who fill the galleries are examples of the fact that this Government can pay men well and permit them to come here and cheer propositions to keep their pay in excess of what their fellow-workmen all over this land are receiving. This Government Office should be conducted as an establishment run in the interest of the country, and that is all that is asked. No reduction is demanded here which brings the wages of workmen below what that class of skilled labor receives all over this country. It is not asked to make their pay one dollar less than that.

One proposition further. The wages paid to these printers to-day are as great as they were during the darkest hours of the war, when everything in the way of the cost of living was high. These men are to-day getting as much as they did during that period.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether, if debate be closed on this proposition, other amendments will be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Indiana that any other germane amendment will be in order after the closing of the debate. The closing of debate has not the effect that the previous question has in the House. It does not exclude amendments, but simply cuts off debate upon them.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I desire to move to amend the paragraph by striking out, in lines 130 and 131, the words "the cities of New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore," and insert in lieu thereof "the city of Washington."

Do I understand that a vote will be taken on these amendments separately?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that a vote will be taken on every amendment separately; that is the uniform rule of the House.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I want to say this, that the wages of these men ought to be regulated by the wages paid in Washington City. I know not if there be any difference between the wages paid in this city and the wages paid in the cities named in the bill; but it is evident that the wages of these men ought to be regulated by the wages paid in the city where they work.

Again, I think I am as much disposed to adopt a course of economy as any gentlemen in the House, but I find that gentlemen are very liberal in voting large compensations when that compensation is to men of certain professions. One thousand dollars is nothing for them to vote for a few days' service, but when it comes to the question of the pay of the laboring-man it is difficult.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Is debate on the pending amendment exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is not exhausted.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I want to say a word in reference to this matter and to protest against the proposed action of the Committee on Appropriations. I do not know that I shall be able to produce any effect upon the committee, but I desire to say that it appears strange to me that the Committee on Appropriations in their great desire to economize should leave the first-class clerks alone and pay them still $1,200 and yet seek to cut down the pay of these men in the Government Printing Office.

Now who are the first-class clerks? A great majority of them, as I understand it, are men who have no qualifications superior to employés in the Government Printing Office. A common-school education qualifies a first-class clerk to perform his duties, while I understand that these printers have to serve an apprenticeship for four years before they are competent to do their work. Now it may be that $1,200 a year is too much for these men. If so, cut down their pay, but do not discriminate between these men and the first-class clerks in the Departments. If you are going to cut down anybody's pay, cut it from all, including ourselves, for that matter.

Now, then, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VANCE] stated, I believe, that some of these parties worked by the piece. I am credibly informed that the men who work by the piece in the Government Printing Office are men that are not sufficiently competent to receive pay at the rate the others receive, and not being sufficiently skillful to receive the ordinary wages they are paid only for the work they do and by the piece. I understand also that there are but a small number of this kind of employés in the Government Printing Office.

Now, then, I do not see why a man should not be paid for his skill in this Department as men are paid for their skill in other Departments of the Government. Why, sir, you are paying women and a great many of them, lady clerks, at the rate of $1,200 a year. I would not cut down their wages, nor would I cut down the wages of these men, most of whom have a wife and children depending on their labor for support.

Now, my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] got up here and made a speech and asked leave to print, and I expect that it will cover eight or ten pages of the RECORD, and that in a five minutes' speech. He says that you have cut $64,000,000 off from the estimate. Why did not he cut off $150,000,000 below the estimate; you could have done it as easily or you could refuse to appropriate anything.

Mr. SPRINGER. On that question I will meet the gentleman before his constituents.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. If you meet me before my constituents I expect you will get beaten. [Laughter.] But I suggest to the gentleman that he will have quite enough to do in his own district without attending to mine.

Mr. SPRINGER. If I have as much difficulty in my district as the gentleman had in getting here, I shall have a hard time of it.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I cannot tell whether the gentleman will have much or little difficulty in his district. One thing I do know, that I received a decided majority of all the votes cast in my district. Can the gentleman say as much?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SINGLETON. I move pro forma to strike out the last two words.

I had made up my mind as a member of the Committee on Printing to recommend the reduction which is now embraced in this bill, and to say not a word upon the subject. I should have been perfectly willing that a vote should be taken upon the amendment which has been offered without debate; but when I find that gentlemen on the other side of the House are so eager to make an issue with us, are so fully determined to drag us before the country as wrong-doers, I feel then that it is my duty to vindicate the action of the Committee on Printing.

Now, sir, there is a great deal more sentimentality indulged in here than I think is becoming this Congress. We cannot legislate upon sentiment. If you undertake to do that you will have to take care of every man's family in the city of Washington when he is not able to take care of it himself. Some gentleman near me suggests that we are doing that now; that is not quite the case. But if we permit ourselves to be forced from that propriety which should mark our course as members of Congress, in looking alone to the people who reside in the city of Washington and not to the whole mass of the people, we will soon have the whole of them upon our hands.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say——

Mr. SINGLETON. Hold on a minute; I am not through yet. Let us come down to common sense about this matter; let us regard it in the light of stubborn facts, and see whether the charge made upon the other side of the House against the Committee on Appropriations is correct or not. My friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is almost taken with a spasm every time the Committee on Appropriations is mentioned. It seems to have almost the same effect upon him that the galvanic battery has upon a dead frog; it seems to straighten him right ont every time the Committee on Appropriations is mentioned. We are here to perform the duty which is demanded at our hands as economists and as true friends of all the people of the country. And are we to be abused by every man who can get up and indulge in that sort of tirade without any sort of justification for it? Do we represent any particular class of individuals in this community? Are we to legislate for any class of men, or are we here to represent the country at large? Every man, if he answers that question candidly, will say that we are to represent the whole country, to look to the interests of the country, to keep them steadily in view. Whatsoever may be our feelings on the subject we cannot depart from that line of action, but must follow it let it lead where it may.

Has it come to this, that we are to take money out of the pockets of the people of this country who now have scarcely bread to eat, as we have been told so often on this floor, and pay it to those who choose to remain here in public employment? If so, then we had better allow them to come in and divide among themselves what is in the Treasury, and then go home and tell our people that we have no control whatsoever over this matter.

The plain facts in the case are just these: The testimony taken during the investigation by the Printing Committee shows that the most enormous prices are paid to the employés of the Government Printing Office, far above the prices paid in private printing establishments. Why should we do this? Can any one give a good reason for it? Any man who is carrying on this business in his own name would seek to employ his labor at a reasonable price, not above that paid in other first-class printing establishments outside of Washington.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] has expired.

Mr. RANDALL. As a member of the Committee on Appropriations I desire to say that I expected all the abuse that has been heaped upon the Committee on Appropriations when we started in this work. It is a very plain duty that we have to perform, and the issue between that side of the House and this side is a very distinct one, and he who runs may read.

Mr. O'NEILL. Will my friend allow me——

Mr. RANDALL. Do not interrupt me; sit down, if you please.

Mr. O'NEILL. I want to remind my colleague——

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, will you see that that gentleman sits down? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary that the Chair should remind the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] that he is not in order in persisting in speaking against the statement of his colleague [Mr. RANDALL] that he does not yield to him.

Mr. O'NEILL. I merely wanted to jog his memory.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. RANDALL. The issue is a distinct one. These facts are presented to us, and we must govern ourselves accordingly; we must either run in debt, issue more bonds in that direction, or we must levy more taxes in order to obtain more revenue, or we must cut down the expenditures of the Government. We must choose which of these three we will do, either to increase the public debt, or impose additional taxation, or cut down expenditures. The Committee on Appropriations has selected the last; and they believe they have selected that course which meets the approval of the American people.

To make the issue more distinct, it is whether we shall give the $40,000,000 which we propose to save in these expenditures to the great mass of the people, or allow you to continue to divide it among the appointees and employés and contractors of this Government. That is the issue here to-night; that is the issue now before the people of this country between the two parties that represent the political divisions of the nation.

When you talk about appeals to the laboring interests, I feel, humble as I am, that it would be unworthy of me to listen to any such appeals. I have vastly more respect for those who applaud in these galleries than I have for gentlemen upon this floor, who ought to be statesmen, who get up here and lower themselves by making appeals to the prejudices of the laboring classes, as they suppose. I tell you that the laboring classes understand this question. The laboringman knows that the taxes in this country must be reduced in order that prosperity may again prevail throughout the length and breadth of this land, and that he shall not be deprived of the provisions and the clothing necessary for himself and his family.

We have sought as a committee to pursue a straight and just line, discriminating neither on the one side nor the other, doing by the Government exactly as we would do in our individual business. Who is there here to gainsay the correctness of our course in that respect? I hear no reply. I am done.

I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. CONGER, Mr. FORT, Mr. FOSTER, and Mr. CANNON of Illinois addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has moved that the committee rise to close debate.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the gentleman will yield.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to dismiss your complaint against this side of the House that we are behindhand in passing the appropriation bills.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his motion now.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on the motion?

Mr. RANDALL. I do.

Mr. CONGER. Then I hope it will be voted down.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. RANDALL, there were—ayes 88, noes 39.

Mr. PAGE. No quorum!

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make that point?

Mr. SPRINGER. A quorum is not required to vote upon a motion that the committee rise, which in this respect is equivalent to a motion that the House adjourn.

The CHAIRMAN. The chair would remind the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] that upon this motion no quorum is required to vote. The motion is agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the sundry civil bill; and, pending that motion, I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the pending paragraph terminate in one quarter of a minute.

Mr. PAGE. Pending that, I move that the House adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. PAGE, there were—ayes 29, noes 111.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. No quorum has voted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No quorum is required on a motion to adjourn.

The question then recurred on the motion of Mr. RANDALL, that all debate in the Committee of the Whole on the pending paragraph be terminated in fifteen seconds.

Mr. PAGE. I would inquire what time the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to let the House adjourn?

Mr. RANDALL. I have nothing to do with that. The House adjourns itself.

The motion was agreed to.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. RANDALL that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the sundry civil appropriation bill, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana, it was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. MUTCHLER.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 71, noes 58; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered and Mr. MUTCHLER and Mr. SPRINGER were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 57; no quorum voting.

Mr. RANDALL. I will ask a vote in the House on this amendment, so that the Committee of the Whole may not be broken up for want of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment, then, will be regarded as agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that by a statute passed in 1874 the title of the printer was changed from "Government Printer" to "Public Printer." I move, therefore, to amend by striking out "Government" and inserting "Public."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 144 insert the following as a new paragraph:

That the Joint Committee on Printing of the Senate and House shall, upon the passage of this act, advertise for proposals for the printing and binding of the debates of Congress for the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress, and shall award the contract to the lowest responsible bidder, who shall give bond in the sum of $100,000 for the faithful performance of the contract. And it shall be the duty of the heads of the various Departments and of the Librarian of Congress severally upon the passage of this act to prepare schedules of the printing and binding required for the year ending June 30, 1877, and to advertise for proposals for executing the same, and shall award the contract to the lowest responsible bidders upon good and sufficient security being given for the prompt and faithful performance of the work: Provided, That it shall be the duty of the Government Printer to submit to the heads of the various Departments and the Librarian of Congress a statement setting forth the cost at the Government Printing Office of the work required; and should the cost set forth by the Government Printer be as low or lower than the bids, then the work shall be executed at the Government Printing Office; and whenever work is executed at the Government Printing Office it shall be the duty of the Government Printer to furnish with each and every document, pamphlet, blank, blank-book, with and without printed headings, job of printing or job of binding thus executed, a bill or memorandum setting forth the number of copies, the quantity, weight, cost, the description of paper, the number of pages, the number of thousand ems, printer's measurement, the cost of composition, making-up, and imposing, proof-reading, correcting, and press-work, the cost, if any, of stereotyping, electrotyping, lithographing, or engraving, including paper and printing, the cost of dry-pressing, folding, gathering, stitching, sewing, and binding, including materials.

Mr. HURLBUT. I make a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What point of order does the gentleman make?

Mr. HURLBUT. That the amendment is new legislation in violation of existing law, and does not on its face show any economy. Combinations of contractors are very common in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. HURLBUT. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair overrules the point of order, and without discussion, under the rule which provides that no amendment shall be in order changing existing laws except where it retrenches expenditure. In the judgment of the Chair the amendment proposed is a reduction in the expenditures of the Government.

Mr KASSON. I rose to submit the point of order at the same time with the gentleman from Illinois, and should be glad, with the permission of the Chair, to say a word in support of it.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KASSON. I do not know that I ought to say anything after the decision of the Chair. I will only say a word in support of the point of order. It does appear, under the ruling made formerly when a like question was before the House, that this amendment of and by itself will not result in any economy of expenditure. There is nothing in the amendment whatever that indicates it. The whole effect is to change the mode of doing the public printing without any reduction of expenditure resulting so far as the amendment would indicate it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has expressed his judgment on the point of order raised, and unless some gentleman desires to take the sense of the committee on an appeal from the decision of the Chair, the Chair will put the question on the amendment.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rise to oppose the amendment, and I only wish to say——

Mr. RANDALL. Debate has been closed on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been closed on the pending paragraph, and as this is an amendment to the pending paragraph it is not open to debate.

Mr. KASSON. This is an entirely new proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. But it is offered as an amendment to the pending paragraph, on which debate has been closed by order of the House.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The House never could have contemplated by cutting off debate on the pending paragraph they also cut off debate on this additional section. If that were true, you could offer an amendment to a section on which debate had been closed appropriating $20,000,000 for any purpose whatever, and all debate on it would be cut off.

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair has decided the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided that under the order of the House debate is cut off until the following paragraph shall be reached, and that paragraph has not yet been read by the Clerk.

Mr. BANKS. Upon these questions the House invariably closes debate only on the subject under discussion. This subject has not been and could not have been under discussion up to this moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BANKS. Such was not intended to be the order when the motion was made closing debate.

Mr. RANDALL. It was so made and was so intended, and was so understood by the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Debate was closed only on the pending paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. And this is an amendment to the pending paragraph.

Mr. BANKS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. Could the gentleman from Pennsylvania, after closing debate on the paragraph, move an amendment to it.

Mr. RANDALL. Of course he could; read the rule.

Mr. BANKS. I do not wish to debate the point of order, but——

Mr. RANDALL. It cannot be debated, as debate has been closed.

Mr. BANKS. I have listened to——

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman going on?

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will be taken on the appeal.

Mr. BANKS. The chairman of the committee, who made the motion to close debate, misrepresented it to the House.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman when he makes that remark is unworthy of a seat here—no, it was a remark unworthy of him.

Mr. PAGE. I ask that the words be taken down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House? The Chair asks the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to take the chair and take the vote on the appeal.

Mr. BANKS. Then I withdraw the appeal, if the Chair goes to so much trouble.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not desire to act as judge in the matter of the appeal.

Mr. BANKS. It is the duty of the Chair. I withdraw the appeal.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. VANCE, of Ohio.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 34.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appoints Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, and Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, as tellers.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that this go as the other amendment, and we have a vote on it in the House.

Mr. O'NEILL. O, no.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 70, noes 15; no quorum voting.

Mr. RANDALL moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the Chair, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the House take a recess until eleven o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. PAGE. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is not the question first to be taken on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as that fixes the time to which the House shall adjourn?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I make the point of order that the time of meeting cannot be changed in that way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BANKS. It requires a quorum to take a recess.

The question recurred on the motion to adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 95.

So the House refused to adjourn.

And then (at eleven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until eleven o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House re-assembled at eleven o'clock a. m. Thursday, June 22, Mr. COX, Speaker pro tempore, in the chair.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. HURLBUT. Before the House goes into Committee of the Whole I would like to be allowed to make a report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for that?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir: if it gives rise to no debate.

A. J. SMITH.

Mr. HURLBUT, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3711) to authorize the President of the United States to place the name of A. J. Smith, late colonel of the Seventh Cavalry, on the retired list; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAMPSON. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 3370) to amend the statutes in relation to damages for infringement of patents, and for other purposes, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. The motion to suspend the rules suspends the rule under which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SAMPSON] can claim the floor for the purpose he has indicated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] moves to suspend all rules, in order that the House may go into Committee of the Whole House on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. SAMPSON. As I understand, the motion I have called up is of the highest privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will find on examining the rules that when other matters are pending the motion to reconsider cannot be called up. Any member may enter the motion to reconsider and take any other member off the floor for that purpose; but it is another thing to call up that motion. The pending question is that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. When that is concluded, the Chair will be pleased to recognize the gentleman from Iowa.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 144 insert the following as a new paragraph:

That the Joint Committee on Printing of the Senate and House shall, upon the passage of this act, advertise for proposals for the printing and binding of the debates of Congress for the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress, and shall award the contract to the lowest responsible bidder, who shall give bond in the sum of $100,000 for the faithful performance of the contract. And it shall be the duty of the heads of the various Departments and of the Librarian of Congress severally, upon the passage of this act, to prepare schedules of the printing and binding required for the year ending June 30, 1877, and to advertise for proposals for executing the same, and shall award the contract to the lowest responsible bidders upon good and sufficient security being given for the prompt and faithful performance of the work: Provided, That it shall be the duty of the Government Printer to submit to the heads of the various Departments and the Librarian of Congress a statement setting forth the cost at the Government Printing Office of the work required; and should the cost set forth by the Government Printer be as low or lower than the bids, then the work shall be executed at the Government Printing Office; and whenever work is executed at the Government Printing Office it shall be the duty of the Government Printer to furnish with each and every document, pamphlet, blank, blank-book, with and without printed headings, job of printing or job of binding thus executed, a bill or memorandum setting forth the number of copies, the quantity, weight, cost, the description of paper, the number of pages, the number of thousand ems, printer's measurement, the cost of composition, making up, and imposing, proof-reading, correcting, and press-work, the cost, if any, of stereotyping, electrotyping, lithographing, or engraving, including paper and printing, the cost of dry-pressing, folding, gathering, stitching, sewing, and binding, including materials.

Mr. KASSON. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as the House is thin, that there be unanimous consent to postpone for the present the consideration of this amendment. It involves interests of great importance.

Mr. RANDALL. It involves a saving of $300,000, probably.

Mr. KASSON. It involves a question in regard to which there should be some consideration.

Mr. RANDALL. My anxiety is to press this bill through, but I am willing to allow ten minutes of discussion on this amendment, five minutes to each side.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that ten minutes' discussion be allowed on the pending amendment?

There was no objection.

Mr. KASSON. I should be glad, before saying anything myself, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania would explain the effect as he regards it of this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. So far as I understand it, the effect of the amendment is this: First, it provides for letting out the printing and binding of the debates of Congress to the lowest bidder. Then it provides that heads of Departments shall advertise for bids for the printing and binding they require, such as blanks, ledgers, and various account-books, and all forms to be used by the Departments; that they shall advertise for them, and that the public shall have a right to bid; and it compels the Public Printer to bid with other people; the Public Printer having the advantage in bidding against private parties of his type on hand, of his building, with no rent to pay, no taxation, no cost for heating, no cost in fact for anything except the labor alone and the material furnished. If the Public Printer shall be the lowest bidder, the Government shall do the work. Or if he offers to do it at the same price that others offer to do it, then he shall have the preference. This in no manner, as I understand it, interferes with the proposition that all congressional printing shall be done at the Public Printing Office.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Suppose the Public Printer comes in and bids, having all the material furnished, and gets the contract, and fails to execute it, who is responsible for the damage?

Mr. RANDALL. Well, sir, the removal of the Public Printer is the remedy; because, if he is not fit to make a bid for a contract which he can execute when he has all these advantages I have enumerated as against the private individual, why surely he is not fit for his place. He has no rent to pay, as I have said. He has the type furnished. He has everything except the material and the labor.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The object is, then, to ascertain when the Public Printer should be removed?

Mr. RANDALL. Not at all. The Public Printer will of course continue the publication of all documents ordered by Congress, resolutions, bills, and congressional documents. But this opens to the competition of the public the printing of the debates and secures to the Government at the lowest price all the matters now printed and furnished by the Government Printing Office to the various heads of Departments necessary for the conduct of their business during the year.

I should not have taken so much time if it had not been that I was invited by the gentleman from Iowa to give an explanation of the amendment.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has expressed the theory on which he thinks it advisable that we shall adopt this amendment. I happen to be one of those gentlemen in the House who have not a single appointee in nor the slightest devotion to or interest in the Government Printing Office, except so far as the public interest is involved. My only object is that we shall adopt such a system as shall be for the advantage of the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. This amendment proposes to create competition.

Mr. KASSON. It occurs to me that the Government has a large investment in the building, machinery, and material in the Government Printing Office; and as every private citizen finds his advantage in putting all his invested capital to use, so should the Government, having full control of a completely equipped printing office, use its entire capacity to the extent of its entire business. If the Public Printer must bid against private individuals, one of two results must arise from this condition of affairs: either that the Government shall allow its capital and its complete set of fixtures to remain idle, or else that the outsider who desires to take this business from the Government Printing Office shall allow his capital and material to remain idle. Both must be fully equipped to do it all, and one or both must suffer loss or combine for high prices.

You have also your force of employés there hired by the year and hired by the week, and we propose not to give them all the work that the Government requires, and yet that their salaries shall go on. There is but one concern besides the Government in the city of Washington which has ability to do this work on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The competition, in case you open the matter to bids, would be exclusively between the two offices, the office of Rives and the Government Printing Office. The amendment means that that establishment with so much capital now lying idle shall be allowed to bid against the Public Printing Office, and to the loss of the Government Office, or it means nothing.

I have always acknowledged the excellence and the good style of the work done in printing the Congressional Globe. I do not know whether it was wise for us to make the change that was made. But gentlemen must remember the motive of the change; it was to get greater economy by doing this work under the direction of the Government and saving to the Treasury the profits which a private establishment would derive from it. This is a proposition to change the system back again, and gentlemen should show us facts, very carefully ascertained, proving the economy of the other system, before asking us to pass this amendment.

For these reasons I hope that this question will be deferred to more careful consideration and be considered in a separate bill. I think it unsafe for us to accept it in its present form.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a test on the Government Printing Office in the line of economy.

The question was taken on the amendment; and on a division there were—ayes 60, noes 31; no quorum voting.

Mr. KASSON. I will not make the point of order that there is no quorum voting, but I shall ask for a vote upon this amendment in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman will have a right to vote on the amendment in the House without asking it here.

The CHAIRMAN. No further count being demanded, the amendment is agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, and read as follows:

That so much of all laws or parts of laws as provide for the election or appointment of Congressional Printer or Public Printer be, and the same are hereby, repealed, to take effect on the 30th day of June, 1876; and the President of the United States shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a suitable person, who must be a practical printer and versed in the art of bookbinding, to take charge of and manage the Government Printing Office from and after the day aforesaid; he shall be called the "Government Printer," and shall be vested with all the powers and subject to all the restrictions pertaining to the officer now known as the Congressional Printer; he shall give bond in the sum of $100,000 for the faithful performance of the duties of his office, said bond to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior; and he shall receive a salary at the rate of $3,500 a year.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to strike out in line 146 the word "Congressional," and insert in lieu thereof "Public;" so that it shall read: "Public Printer." I move also, in line 157, to strike out the word "Congressional" and insert "Public;" so that it shall read: "Public Printer."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I move pro forma to strike out the last clause of the paragraph. I am disposed to favor the proposition embraced in this clause under consideration. Much has been said upon this floor about the large reductions that have been made by this House and by the Committee on Appropriations. They have been stated to amount to $40,000,000. I am willing to concede that the Committee on Appropriations has labored incessantly and has labored for good ends, but I believe this, that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the House will thank me for making a correct statement of what the reductions are.

I am not surprised that the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Illinois make misstatements as to the reductions, but I am surprised that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations should make a statement to the House and the country that there is a reduction of $40,000,000. I hold in my hand a statement submitted last night by the gentleman from Illinois, and in that I find a reduction of $4,000,000 in the deficiency appropriation bill. I submit to the House and to the country that this cannot be credited to this Committee on Appropriations. If there is any credit that is due to anybody at all it is due to the committee of the last Congress. This appropriation for deficiencies was for the last year, and the Lord only knows how much the deficiencies will be for the next year. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the committee, has stated time and again on this floor that deficiencies will have to be provided for at the next session. Now this is an amount, $4,000,000; deduct that and it leaves $35,000,000. Then we have re-appropriated money, without naming any sum, now in the Treasury amounting to $3,000,000 more, which reduces it to $32,000,000. We have made no appropriation whatever to pay the judgments of the Court of Claims, amounting probably to about $2,000,000, and we have made an indefinite appropriation which will amount to about $1,000,000 more for the maintenance of mint and assay offices, so that the total reduction cannot be counted at more than $30,000,000. This is a very large reduction; a larger reduction than I think is wise, and I believe when next December comes the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will come before the House with very large deficiencies, as he has already indicated time and again to the House.

Mr. RANDALL. One point about the deficiencies. In estimating the amount of appropriations for each year it is but fair to take into account the appropriation bills of that year and the amounts appropriated by them. During the war, for instance, the deficiencies were very large, and we could not count them in the appropriations for the prior year, but we counted them in the appropriations of the year in which they were made. That is the only legitimate, fair, and intelligent way in which to estimate the reductions, by calculating the amounts appropriated each year in the twelve general appropriation bills, and instituting a comparison between those twelve appropriation bills of the one year and the same bills for the preceding year. I know of no other way to do it.

Now, as to the deficiencies having been less this year than last year, I am glad of it; and so far as is just I concede the merit of that to the Committee on Appropriations of last year. But I am reminded of the fact that notice was served on the Departments by the minority of the House in the last Congress that they would obtain no deficiencies this year unless they were absolutely necessary and were of such a character as to show that the Departments could not do without them. I claim a little merit for the minority upon that account, for the notice they served in the last Congress, knowing that they would become the majority in this Congress.

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw my amendment and move to strike out the last word. Notwithstanding the explanation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] I claim that I have shown conclusively that the actual reductions made by the Committee on Appropriations this year are not over $30,000,000. For that they are entitled to whatever credit there is in it. I give the gentleman from Pennsylvania great credit for what he has done; he has labored day and night. I believe the difficulty with him has been that before he entered upon this work he made the announcement to the country that he was going to make a reduction in the expenditures of the Government to the extent of $40,000,000. He has been laboring for the reduction of that forty millions rather than always for the good of the service. I believe these reductions can stand at twenty to twenty-five millions without serious results.

The gentleman, I think, has made rather a loose statement, for him, in regard to the financial condition of the country. He stated here some days ago that the deficit in the revenues would be from seventeen to twenty millions of dollars. Yet in fact it was shown by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] that the deficit would only be about $5,000,000; and the receipts for the remainder of June may reduce that to perhaps $4,000,000.

As to the next year, who knows anything about it? The receipts from internal revenue this year would have been clear up to the estimates but for the attempt at this session to legislate in the line of a reduction of the tax on whisky. And the attempt to interfere with the tariff has undoubtedly affected the revenues from customs.

No one knows what next year will bring forth. I make the prediction, however—and I believe I have the authority of the Treasury Department for it—that the reduction of revenues from customs will not exceed $10,000,000, and the chances are that there will be a very perceptible increase in the revenues from internal sources, and from miscellaneous revenues we may expect an increase of revenues also. Therefore the Government is not so poor as the gentleman from Pennsylvania represents.

I do not make this statement as any argument for extravagance. I believe we should put in the pruning-knife to the hilt wherever we can. But the country ought not to understand that the Treasury is in so near a bankrupt condition as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

For the past two years every item of the ordinary expenses of the Government has been paid and the sinking fund has been provided for. Therefore, after all the loose statements made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the fact stands that the condition of the Treasury is better now than it has been before for the past four years.

One other point. Much has been said, and particularly last night, about the estimates, and I want to say a word about that. It is stated here often, I believe always, that the Department asks for this and asks for that. That is a mistake. Take your river and harbor bill as you passed it last year and as you passed it this year. You provide for a large number of surveys of rivers and harbors all over the country. The board of engineers make the estimates for what you ask them to make estimates for. You direct them to make these surveys and estimate for the improvements, and they do so. They make estimates for public buildings, for fortifications, for light-houses, and all that sort of thing. They tell you what it will cost, and if you want to appropriate for it you may. The Department does not ask Congress to appropriate a single dollar for these things; but at our request they tell us what these things will cost and what existing laws call for. That is all there is of it.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman seeks to parry the assertion which I made, that $40,000,000 of reduction can be made in the expenses of this Government, by stating that it was a loose remark.

Mr. FOSTER. O, no; not that. What I referred to was in reference to the finances.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say to the gentleman that that judgment was made up after many years' investigation on this floor of appropriation bills. It is true that I never had the privilege until this year of being a member of the Committee on Appropriations, but the gentleman will bear in mind that I have always investigated the appropriation bills very closely.

Now I want to say here to-day, as a result of studious and industrious investigation of the expenditures of this Government, (and I do not believe the gentleman from Ohio, with his practical knowledge, will controvert the statement,) that if he and I, both having been reared in mercantile pursuits, were to sit down and go over the appropriations of this Government we could further reduce its expenditures $15,000,000 more.

There is a very remarkable fact in connection with appropriation bills; and it is that in 1866 the sundry civil appropriation bill, containing appropriations amounting to about $7,000,000, failed, and no injury ever came to the Government by the failure of that bill; and no person ever suffered by its failure except those to whom specific amounts were therein appropriated.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman will remember that at that time the Executive Departments of the Government had the right under the law to incur liabilities in the absence of appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. Some of the persons who would have received appropriations under that bill never received them in any other bill, showing clearly and conclusively that in the bill there were sums appropriated for the expenditure of which there was neither public obligation nor necessity.

Now, this matter of economy is not exclusively a democratic commodity. In May, 1858, Mr. JOHN SHERMAN, then a Representative from Ohio, now a Senator from that State, a member of the body resisting these reductions, made a most remarkable speech. At that time some who were in accord with the then administration of James Buchanan resisted his position. I ask the Clerk to read a portion of the speech which he made on that occasion.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I will take occasion, then, in a few minutes to have this extract read. It is worth six months' study. It proves that my six months' labor as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has not been without an advocate in former times on the other side of this House.

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out in lines 151 and 152 the words "a practical printer and versed in the art of bookbinding," and inserting "well versed in the arts of bookbinding and printing." It strikes me that the requirement that the person chosen for this work shall be a "practical printer" might exclude from the position many men well versed in general business who would be abundantly competent for the position and who might otherwise obtain it. The language which I propose to insert will accomplish the object desired without narrowing the choice too closely. Probably the chairman of the committee will assent to the amendment.

The language "a practical printer" may be construed as meaning a person who has passed through an apprenticeship at the printing business and can set type. Now, a man thoroughly competent to take charge of this work may be unable to set type, and on the other hand many men able practically to set type might not have the capacity for controlling an immense establishment like this, which disburses millions of dollars every year.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] yields to me the balance of his time, and I ask to have read by the Clerk the paragraph to which I have alluded, because perhaps it may have some effect on the minds of members who are now called upon to vote on this question. The extract about to be read is from Mr. SHERMAN'S speech.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Sir, retrenchment and reform are now matters of imperative necessity. It is not the mere cry of demagogues, but a problem demanding the attention and worthy the highest ability of the Representatives of the people. No party is fit to govern this country which cannot solve it. It is in vain to look to executive officers for reform. Their power and influence depend upon executive patronage; and while we grant they will squander. The Senate is neither by the theory of our system nor by its composition fitted for the task. This House alone has the constitutional power to perfect a radical reform. The Constitution provides that "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law;" and that "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives." These provisions were designed to invest in this House the entire control over the public purse, the power of supply. This is invested in the House of Commons, and has been jealously guarded by it. It is the pearl beyond price, without which constitutional liberty in England would long since have fallen under the despotism of the Crown.

> Instead of a representative Republic, we are degenerating into a bureaucracy, governed by red tape and subaltern clerks. While the powers of the House are invaded, the Executive takes care to extend by construction his just powers. Of this we have an example in the Utah war.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania said, as I understood him, that the sundry civil bill failed in 1866.

Mr. RANDALL. I believe that was the year.

Mr. KASSON. I have before me the sundry civil appropriation act for that year, approved July 28, 1866.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill referred to failed in the session of 1864-'65.

Mr. KASSON. That is the one to which I referred the other day. No bill of that kind has failed since that time, so far as I know.

Mr. HOLMAN. That bill involved appropriations of about seven million dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HARRISON.]

Mr. HARRISON. I believe the chairman of the Committee on Printing assents to my amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I believe the head of this bureau should be a practical printer.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania consented, I believe, to changing the word "Government," in line 154, to "public."

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment will be made, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

That so much of section 3826 of the Revised Statutes as provides that all advertisements, notices, and proposals for contracts for all the Executive Departments of the Government, and the laws passed by Congress, and executive proclamations and treaties, shall be advertised by publication in three daily papers published in the District of Columbia, be, and the same is hereby, amended to limit such publication hereafter to two daily newspapers, published in said District, one of which shall be selected by the Joint Committee on Printing on the part of the Senate and one by the Joint Committee on Printing on the part of the House of Representatives: And provided further, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. KASSON. For the purpose of making an inquiry I move to strike out that paragraph. I see that it assumes the laws of Congress are now still published in newspapers. That is not so. The last Congress repealed that part of the former law, and there is no authority now whatever for the publication of the laws of Congress in any newspaper.

By implication it would seem, from a cursory reading, as if this renewed the authority for the publication of the laws of Congress in the newspapers. It was repealed in 1874 and no occasion for the paragragh exists, so far as the laws of Congress are concerned.

There is another point in it. I do not see why the chairmen of the Committee on Printing in the House and in the Senate should designate a newspaper in the District of Columbia for the publication of executive proclamations and treaties. I know very well why the law was changed as it was, and I disapproved of it. We ought to do here as in respect to the Public Printer, and adopt the proper system of letting them be designated by the Executive Departments of the Government. The chairman of the Committee on Printing of the Senate and the House ought not to have anything to do with it. We ought never to have allowed the Senate to designate the Public Printer. I doubt its constitutionality in some respects. Here we now propose to make a new appointing power in the chairmen of the two Committees on Printing, in the Senate and in the House. I do not think that mode of getting at the result is a wise one.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no objection whatever to change the law so as to require the two newspapers in which the laws are published to be of different political sentiments. So far as that is concerned I have not the least objection. I think it is right it should be so. Gentlemen can amend the law by requiring the proper Executive Department to designate them. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania will agree with me it is hardly worth while to adopt this, however, when there are no laws of Congress to be published, to allow the chairmen of the Committee on Printing of the House and of the Senate to designate the newspapers in which the laws are to be published when the law in that respect has been changed and no publication is provided for.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations has only asked to insert this for the purpose which I will mention, and that is that the publication of the laws should be confined to two instead of three newspapers, which would cut off a part of the expense. Another consideration, and I am free to state it, was that in the publication of the laws all parties and all persons should be cognizant of their terms. It is very desirable to publish the laws in papers of both political sentiments. There are certain classes of people who take a paper of one political sentiment, while others take a paper of different political sentiments. If these laws are only published in one paper, or the papers of one political party, they will of course reach only that portion of the people who read those papers.

Mr. KASSON. I have already said that I would not object to requiring the papers to be of opposite politics, but I do object to changing the mode of appointment.

Mr. RANDALL. We do not propose to give to any member of Congress any authority not provided by the Constitution and laws thereunder.

Mr. KASSON. Why not let this go over for the present, and then the gentleman can draw up a substitute for this paragraph covering the point which he has stated?

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing to let it pass over for the present.

Mr. KASSON. I withdraw my motion to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the paragraph will be passed over for the present.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to insert in line 175 the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

For lithographing and mapping for the Supreme Court of the United States, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And in case there shall not be a sufficient sum of said revenues in the Treasury of the United States at such time as said interest may be due, then the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to advance from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated a sum sufficient to pay said interest, and the same shall be re-imbursed to the Treasury of the United States from time to time as said revenues may be paid into said Treasury, until the whole amount shall have been refunded.

Mr. RANDALL. A word in explanation of that amendment. The Committee on Appropriations do not want to have renewed any delay such as occurred in the August payment of the interest on the 3.65 bonds. The amount necessary to pay the interest on those bonds during the fiscal year, which you will notice we provide for, is $501,000, which we desire the Government of the United States shall advance in case the revenues of the District shall not be sufficient to meet that interest.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the amendment will be reported again; and I hope the committee will at least understand what it is doing.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not know certainly whether that is subject to the point of order or not.

Mr. RANDALL. That amendment did not come from the committee. I offered it myself.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make the point of order on it that it is new legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. But the amendment has been received and debated, and it is too late to make the point of order after its consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the point of order comes too late, because the amendment has already been debated. It does not deprive the gentleman from Indiana, however, of the right to take the sense of the committee on it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course not. I am fully aware, Mr. Chairman, of my right in that respect, and I have no objection to the ruling of the Chair, provided that ruling is uniform, that the point of order must be made before any debate whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that it is the purpose of the Chair, and has been the practice of its present incumbent, to so rule in every case except where the gentleman offering the amendment has himself engaged in the debate to the exclusion of the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not engage in the debate. The gentleman from Pennsylvania submitted the proposition and made a statement. I rose and desired that the amendment should be read, saying that I did not know what it was; whether it was subject to the point of order or not. I had not debated it myself. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, who offered the amendment, had.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that the amendment was under consideration in committee before the gentleman from Indiana asked to have it reread; and it was only after the rereading of the amendment and discussion on it that the point of order was made.

Mr. HOLMAN. The amendment was submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and he immediately proceeded to make his remarks on it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana propose to discuss the amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do, if the Chair rules that it is not subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would rule that it is not subject to the point of order at this stage.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish it to be understood that this proposition does not come from the Committee on Appropriations. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers it on his responsibility as a member of the House. The provision incorporated into this bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to reserve out of the revenues of the District a sum sufficient to pay the interest on these bonds was thought by the Committee on Appropriations to be sufficient.

The proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is that this interest shall be paid out of the Federal Treasury, and refunded from time to time—the time being left entirely indefinite—to the Government of the United States out of the revenues of the District. I do not wish to see the Government assume the responsibility of the payment of that interest. If we do it in this instance a precedent is established, and I predict, sir, that if this provision becomes law, the Government will have to provide for the payment of this interest year after year.

This is not a debt of the whole people of this country. It is not a debt of the United States. It is a debt of the District of Columbia, and a charge upon its revenues. And I hold that Congress does its full duty when it provides that the necessary reservation from the revenues of the District shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury to meet the interest on these bonds.

Why should the whole people of this country be chargeable with this debt? Gentlemen must see that by a slow and gradual process we are assuming the responsibility of the entire debt of this District. I am aware of the value of the public credit; but I am not aware that the credit of this Government is involved in the payment of the interest on these bonds. I am aware that this Government should declare that the revenues of this District shall pay the interest; but I am not aware that the whole revenues of this country should be chargeable with the duty of paying this debt, either interest or principal. And for one, representing the constituency who I think should not bear this burden or any part of this burden, I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3749)) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at eleven o'clock and fifty-seven minutes a. m. Thursday, June 22) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. CRAPO: The petition of William S. McFarlin, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAYMOND: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from La Porte, Indiana, to Three Oaks, Michigan, via Hatch Mills, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. LYNCH: Papers relating to the claim of Matilda Shields, for compensation for property taken, occupied, and destroyed by the United States authorities at Alexandria, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. O'BRIEN: Remonstrance of the Medical and Chirurgical Faculty of the State of Maryland, against the passage of the bill incorporating the National Medical Institute of the District of Columbia, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. REAGAN: Memorial of citizens of Eastern and Northeastern Texas, against the removal of the place of holding the Federal courts from Tyler to Dallas, Texas, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SAVAGE: The petition of citizens of Des Moines Valley, Iowa, to be protected in their rights and homes on the odd sections of land in the valley of the Des Moines, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 22, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings; when, on motion of Mr. KELLY, the further reading was dispensed with.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. No. 865) to provide for the appointment of additional circuit-court commissioners, and to prevent oppression;

A bill (H. R. No. 3150) in relation to judgment liens;

A bill (H. R. No. 3168) relating to partition of real estate in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 3746) relating to the terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States in and for the district of Iowa;

A bill (H. R. No. 3747) to secure service of process in the United States courts in certain cases; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3748) to provide for the redemption of real estate sold under judgments and decrees in the courts of the United States.

The bill (H. R. No. 58) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 844) relating to land patents was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of John Edwards, jr., late captain Third United States Artillery, praying to be restored to his former rank and position in the Army of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the memorial of the presidents of the various marine-insurance companies of the city of New York, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3187) to amend title 53 of the Revised Statutes relating to merchant seamen. In connection with this memorial, I wish to say that a variety of communications come to me, addressed to me personally, the writers supposing that under the rules of the Senate they are presentable here. As the Chair knows and as I know, they are not presentable; and so I cannot present them; but I make this mention of them to say that some of them are representations in one direction and some in the other. I move the reference of this memorial to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I present also the petition of a large number of firms, bankers, and corporations in the city of New York, praying for the passage of the bill recently introduced by me, the bill (S. No. 846) to punish the counterfeiting of trade-mark goods and the sale of or dealing in counterfeit trade-mark goods. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DENNIS presented the memorial of Workman & Co., and various citizens of the United States, ship-owners, merchants, and others, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3187) to amend title 53 of the Revised Statutes relating to merchant seamen; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 833) granting a pension to Johanna Luskey, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2804) granting a pension to Harriet C. Dunham, widow of Charles A. Dunham, late private Company A, One hundred and eighteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2581) to amend section 3887 of the Revised Statutes, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2575) to amend sections 3893 and 3894 of the Revised Statutes, providing a penalty for mailing obscene books and other matters therein contained, and prohibiting lottery circulars passing through the mail, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1896) granting a pension to Benjamin Hickey, a private in Company C, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2838) granting an increase of pension to Thomas H. Martin, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2700) granting increase of pension to Edward Dempsey, late private Company C, Fourth Kentucky Cavalry, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 790) granting a pension to Michael Frederick, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 854) to repeal a part of section 4713 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to pensions, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON. I am also instructed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2228) granting a pension to Thomas Pulling, of Big Rapids, Mecosta County, Michigan, to report it back and ask to be discharged from its further consideration. It appears that the application of the claimant is still pending in the Pension Office.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3359) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2691) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, reported it with amendments.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire before we pass to other business to say that immediately after the disposition of the naval appropriation bill I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of each of these bills. They are in the nature of appropriation bills, and I think ought to have the early consideration of the Senate. They have been very faithfully considered, as I understand, by the House committee, and have passed the House of Representatives. We have considered them very carefully in our committee and have made some amendments. The amendments are for the most part merely formal, as to names. Some of the claims we have disallowed, and others we have recommitted to the claims commission. So soon as the naval appropriation bill shall be passed, I hope to get these bills before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to enter a caveat against the notice of my friend, as there are one or two bills of a good deal of importance reported from the Judiciary Committee some time ago that it is very important should be acted upon; and I think I must move as soon as the naval bill is over, as I have tried once or twice before, to get them up.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to state that there is nothing in these cases that will take any time except the reading of the bills, and I do not think the reading even will be called for. If I supposed they would take time so as to exclude business of more importance, I should certainly not insist upon calling them up at once; but these bills ought to be passed at the earliest day possible.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether the amendments now reported from the committee are of sufficient importance to require that the bills should be reprinted?

Mr. WRIGHT. Not at all. For the most part they are merely corrections in the names of claimants, and there is no necessity for reprinting the bills at all.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2602) granting a pension to Eleanor Douglass, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2081) granting a pension to William McLay, late a private in Company G, Twelfth Illinois Infantry Volunteers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWE. The Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 541) relating to telegraphic communication between the United States and foreign countries, have directed me to report back the bill without amendment and to recommend its passage. The bill does nothing but authorize the Secretary of State to allow cables to be landed on our shores where other countries allow them to be landed on their shores; and it directs the order in which dispatches shall be sent, and punishes the violations of the offenses against the cables. That is all the bill does. I think there will be no objection to passing it now, if the Senate will hear it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, there will be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. My only objection (because I have no doubt I shall vote for the bill as it is described) is that at this stage of the session, when we are in a hurry, I doubt whether any bill, except the most formal one, ought to pass on the day it is reported, we so often fall into accidents by action of that kind; and if it will not make any great difference to my friend, I prefer to have this bill go on the Calendar.

Mr. HOWE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

COLONEL W. H. EMORY.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask unanimous consent to take up a bill, the consideration of which I think will require but a few minutes. It is a bill authorizing the retirement of Colonel W. H. Emory with the rank and pay of a brigadier-general. I will state the reason why I make this request. The next officer in rank has been asked for by the General to take command of an expedition, and in order that he may take command Colonel Emory will have to be retired. He is of the age to be retired; and if he is not retired by this bill the President will have to retire him in a grade less than the bill proposes to retire him, and this bill will have to be passed to-day to be effective. That is the reason I give to the Senate for asking that this bill be acted upon this morning, and if there is no objection I would be glad to have it passed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is Colonel Emory to be retired by his own consent?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly. He requests it. He is of the age to be retired anyhow; but still he asks it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1846) authorizing the retirement of Colonel W. H. Emory with the rank and pay of a brigadier-general.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I will state to the Senate that this is an exception to the general rule. It is the first time that I, as chairman of the Military Committee, have ever agreed to an exception to the rule of retiring officers; but in this case I do not think it will set a precedent to be followed hereafter. This officer is the oldest officer in the Army of his rank. He has served forty-three years, and has been ten years in command according to the rank which he will hold if he is retired under the bill, but he has been jumped by appointments all the time and kept in the rank of colonel. The committee considered it nothing but fair to him, in consideration of his long service in the Army in the position he held in which he should have had the rank, that he be retired now on that rank. I ask for this reason that the bill be passed. There is a printed report in connection with the bill.

Mr. KELLY. It is not to be a precedent, I understand.

Mr. LOGAN. Not a precedent at all, for there is no man in the Army of the same service and the same age as this man.

Mr. KELLY. I have no objection, if it is not to stand as a precedent.

Mr. LOGAN. It will not.

Mr. THURMAN. I shall vote for this bill, but I wish to say a word in explanation. When I first heard of the proposition, I was under the impression that General Emory was in some sort responsible for what I consider a very great violation of the Constitution: the interference of the military with the Legislature of Louisiana at the last organization or attempted organization of that body. If I were satisfied that that was the case, I could not vote for retiring him in this exceptional manner to a higher rank than he really would be entitled to upon the retired list. I am satisfied, however, from facts that have come to my knowledge, that General Emory was not responsible at all for that military interference, and as he is undoubtedly a very meritorious officer I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not put it upon the ground of responsibility or irresponsibility. I do not care whether he was responsible or not for that matter. He is entitled to be retired on this rank.

Mr. THURMAN. I am speaking for myself. If I thought he were responsible for that action, I could not vote for the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want to go into a discussion of that question at this time.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PADDOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 934) to provide for furnishing certified transcripts of territorial records; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ANTHONY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 935) providing for a disbursing officer for the Congressional Printing Office; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

STATEMENTS OF PUBLIC DEBT.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to furnish to the Senate at an early day a statement showing the public debt at the end of each fiscal year from 1836 to 1876, as appears upon the books of the Register.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much will that cost?

Mr. DAVIS. I will say to the Senator that this is a request to the Treasury Department to state the gross amount of the public debt at the end of each fiscal year since 1836, as it appears upon the books of the Register. We have annual statements for each year of the public debt as it appears in the Secretary's report. Now I should like to know how it appears upon the books of the Register. The Committee on Finance, in its report made a few days ago with regard to some remarks that I made some time ago to the Senate, say that the books have not been changed. It is plain that the official reports have been changed; and this resolution is asking information as to what is the gross amount of the debt at the end of each fiscal year as appears on the books of the Treasury. The purpose is, I will say, to ascertain whether or not the amount that appears on the books of the Treasury agrees with the official reports to Congress. That is the object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The resolution is still subject to objection, and I only wish to find out what it means, and the expense of such calls. I notice, as the Senator has stated, that this information is asked for the state of a particular set of books, the Register's books. Now, then, my query is whether we ought not to provide also for information which would elucidate, if any elucidation be necessary, any real or apparent difference between the books of the Register and the books of the Treasurer, if you please, or the books of the loan branch, if that is the branch which has charge of the public debt. My query about it is whether we are going to get information that is substantially accurate by asking in respect to one particular set of books; and in that view I rather think the resolution had better go over until to-morrow, so that we can ascertain what should be done. I wish to get the information very much.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope the Senator will hear me before he makes the objection. I greatly prefer to have the information as indicated by the Senator; but believing that it would involve considerable work to get it from the different books, and believing from the annual reports that they would not agree, I thought it would be much shorter and much more convenient to take it from the books of the Register, which the Senator knows are the official books. I believe the Register is the book-keeper of the Treasury Department, and his office is the official resting-place of all warrants, and is the source from which the official accounts come of the expenditures, receipts, and the public debt. I understand that up to 1870 or 1871 the Register's office was the only branch in which such accounts were kept; but at that time there was inaugurated in the Treasury another department in the Secretary's office which got up a new table and since that time it has been kept up there. If the Senator desires any amendment I will accept it with a great deal of pleasure; but after showing the resolution to the chairman of the Committee on Finance, I thought that was the shortest and most complete way of getting the information.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I do not doubt that the thoughts of my friend from West Virginia are perfectly correct; they generally are; but I wish to suggest that all the books of the Treasury, I think, are official books, just as much as those of the Register's office; and my fear was that I might be misled, as well as other people, if you take the status of a particular set of books in the Treasury, in order to get at a general fact, without reference to the counter-books, if they may be so called, in other branches of the Treasury. That difficulty occurring to my mind was my reason for desiring the resolution to lie over, that I might understand the subject a little better, so that we should get information which should not mislead anybody when we obtain it.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator prefers I will strike out "the Register's books" and insert "the books of the Treasury Department."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will look at it before the resolution comes up again.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say to the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Vermont, that the very information called for is contained in the very report referred to by the Senator from West Virginia; that is, the report made by the Committee on Finance the other day. Every year from the foundation of the Government the amount of the public debt is given. As to discrepancies in the accounts, they are explained away to the satisfaction of every member of the committee. No discrepancy exists in fact, and there has been no alteration of the books; but the fact simply is that in 1870 the mode of keeping the books was changed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then what do we want this information for if we have it already?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know. Every particle of this information is published in every finance report since the time those reports were made. Every year there are tables showing the amount of expenditures, the amount of the debt, the amount of receipts, and so on. But it will not cost anything to answer this resolution. It can be answered, I suppose, by sending down a printed statement cut out of the last finance report.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not think the Senator from Ohio intends to say what I understood him to say, that the report made by the Finance Committee within the last few days contains the information asked for in this resolution. I do not think he means that. If so, either he or I must be greatly mistaken. It is plain to all who have given the subject any thought or read the report that the report says that the books have not been changed, but it admits in substance more than once that the official reports to Congress that are made each year have been changed, and the amount of the public debt has been largely increased, over $200,000,000, by the changes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does the Senator mean by "changed;" a difference in a succeeding year from a former one?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir; I mean by "changed" that, say in the year 1836—there is where the change commences—the figures which were given to the country as correct have been changed and increased to a larger amount. I mean that in another year the figures given to the country as the official report and as they remained for many years in the official reports were changed, and in one year I recollect now, increased as much as $75,000,000. I ask this information to know whether the official reports made to Congress and the books of the Treasury Department correspond, and if they do not, which is correct.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the resolution go over.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that it be printed, and I give notice I will call it up to-morrow morning.

The resolution was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say a word.

Mr. WEST. But the resolution has gone over.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I ought to be allowed to say a word on this resolution after what has occurred.

Mr. WEST. Very well, I yield.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, it is always painful to me to hear statements made like those just made by the Senator from West Virginia, because he does not think about their effect. Why, sir, if what he has said is correct, every man who has held the office of Secretary of the Treasury from the foundation of this Government has been a corrupt man. He speaks of changing the books of the Treasury Department! Why, sir, that is a penitentiary offense; and yet it is charged against every such officer of the Government from the foundation down. Certainly the Senator does not mean that. What is there about this charge? The books of the Treasury Department have not been changed in a word or a figure.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator say the same thing about the official reports to Congress?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do. No official report to Congress has ever been changed and dare not be. It is printed every year just as it is sent here. This is what the Senator means, and he does not mean any more than this, that in 1870 the Secretary of the Treasury, believing that the elements which entered into the statement of the public debt were not correct, that is, that they did not give the information necessary to show at a particular time the amount of the public debt for a particular year, undertook to revise the previous statements that were printed in the reports of the Treasury Department to show that certain new elements ought to have been included at the time the statement of the debt was made every year. In 1870-'71 he gave us a statement of the public debt revised, including these new elements; for instance, the accruing interest and the trust funds which were counted as part of the debt in the new statement and not in the old one, and there were other elements that did not enter into the previous statement. He made a statement including these items. I will state to my honorable friend that the report made a few days ago, to which we gave a good deal of attention, not so much to satisfy my friend from West Virginia as to satisfy everybody who wanted to study the matter—and every member of the committee was of the same opinion—gives the facts and figures, gives the debt as it was originally stated, and the reasons why the change was made. It states the important elements that were omitted in the previous statement and the reasons why those elements were brought into the subsequent account. Then the Secretary of the Treasury, with these new elements made up by officers of the Treasury Department, undertook to state that for 1836, although the debt then was reported at so much, yet if the trust funds had been added, and the accrued interest had been added, &c., and these other matters had been brought in at that time, as he proposed to do subsequently, the debt would have been so and so. No figures were changed, but only in the statements made in 1870 and from that time on new elements were considered as being proper to have been stated that had been omitted without any fault or crime or aleration or forgery.

Mr. WEST. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

Mr. WEST. I believe I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This resolution is still pending.

Mr. DAVIS. Does the Senator wish to cut me off?

Mr. WEST. If the Senator desires now to continue the debate, I have no objection; but I think we shall have to undergo it all again when the resolution comes up for action. It has gone over upon the objection of the Senator from Vermont. However, if the Senator thinks it necessary that he shall be heard, I shall not interpose.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator was very willing to hear one side, and I think he ought to be willing to hear the other.

Mr. President, I have stated, and I restate, and it is a fact, that the official figures stated by the Treasury Department to Congress in each one of the official reports since 1871 have been changed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Tell us what you mean by "changed."

Mr. DAVIS. I mean what I said a moment ago. Take the year 1861-'62, if you please. In that year Mr. Chase reported the public debt to be $514,000,000. His successors, Fessenden, McCulloch, &c., stated it to be the same amount, not only in giving the figures but in reviewing the situation of the country; and in 1870 those figures were changed and raised over $10,000,000, and the public debt for that year was reported at $524,000,000.

Mr. DAWES. I want to understand. Does the Senator mean to say that those figures that Mr. Chase made do not stand now exactly as they did before?

Mr. DAVIS. I mean to say that in each report since 1870 they do not. They have been changed and raised.

Mr. DAWES. That is not my inquiry. Mr. Chase made some figures in 1861, I understand.

Mr. DAVIS. He reported the debt in 1861-'62 at $514,000,000, in round numbers.

Mr. DAWES. That report is in the Treasury Department, is it not?

Mr. DAVIS. I am asking whether it is now by this resolution. I have never been able to see.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator be kind enough to tell me whether he has ever seen it or not?

Mr. DAVIS. Seen what?

Mr. DAWES. The report in the Treasury Department which Mr. Chase made and put his signature to.

Mr. DAVIS. I take it that the official reports sent to Congress are a copy of the books and reports in the Treasury.

Mr. DAWES. I made the inquiry in good faith in order to ascertain of the Senator whether he means to state that the figures which Mr. Chase made at that time and which Mr. McCulloch made at another time do not stand there now in the Treasury Department just as they made them.

Mr. DAVIS. That is the very point of this resolution, to know whether it is so or not.

Mr. DAWES. Has the Senator the slightest information that will enable him to answer this question, whether those figures do not stand in the Treasury Department now just as they did when they were made?

Mr DAVIS. Well, I am not able to say. The Senator who made the report from the Finance Committee says that they do. I say that the official reports sent to Congress and to the country put down a larger amount than that reported in 1861. Take the last report sent to Congress; it says the debt in 1861-'62 was $524,000,000—I speak in round numbers—while the reports from 1862 to 1871 say it was $514,000,000.

Mr. DAWES. I understood the Senator to say distinctly that certain figures made by certain Secretaries whose names he gave, and the date of the time when they made those figures, had been changed on the books.

Mr. DAVIS. Let me make myself understood. I say each report to Congress since 1871, and including 1871, has increased the debt from what it appeared to be in the official reports from 1861 to 1871.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And that is all you mean by "changed?"

Mr. DAVIS. Not quite all. That is one of the changes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Tell us all.

Mr. DAVIS. We are speaking of the public debt now. Of course there are a great many other changes. I mean to say that if you take the table of the public debt from 1836—for that is the date when the changes commenced, I believe, as reported to Congress—take the official finance reports previous to 1870 and run up that column and then take the reports made subsequent to 1870 to the last one that came here, and you will find that the aggregate increase of the public debt is over $200,000,000 and you will find in some particular years there is an advance of as much as $75,000,000 from the amounts reported previously to 1871. There was a change there. The Ex-Secretary of the Treasury, the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] and the Finance Committee, as I understand, have admitted that what I say is a fact, that is, the figures reported to Congress since 1871 have been larger whereby the public debt has been increased apparently, but they say at the same time that the books have not been changed. Now the object of the resolution that I offer is to ascertain whether or not the books have been changed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the resolution will not answer the purpose, because the resolution does not call for any such information as to whether they have been changed or not. It merely calls for a fact. However, we can consider it to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over.

GEORGE E. PAYNE.

Mr. WEST. I desire the consent of the Senate to call up the bill (S. No. 809) referring the claim of George E. Payne to the Court of Claims. There is an elaborate report coming from the Committee on Claims with regard to this case that I presume the Senate will not desire to be detained by listening to; but it presents the case in all its details, and sets forth the facts that this gentleman was deprived of the enjoyment and the use of his property in 1862; that he has been before Congress for the last thirteen years in an effort to get some remuneration or indemnity for the disadvantage of that seizure; that certain moneys have accrued to the Treasury of the United States by virtue thereof; and he asks that the case be submitted to the Court of Claims. The officer who made the seizure is exempt from responsibility in the matter under a law of the United States that so exempts him. The claimant is also debarred from regular proceedings in the Court of Claims, without special sanction of Congress, by the act of limitation.

The case has been before the Committee on Claims several sessions. A report was prepared once by the former chairman, Hon. Mr. Pratt, of Indiana, but failed of presentation owing to the lateness of the session. It has now been fully considered by the committee and comes before the body with their full sanction. I think we can do nothing less than grant the prayer of the petitioner and let the case go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is quite obvious to me that this ancient claim, which involves repealing the statute of limitations for this one claimant, and so for everybody else I suppose when others apply, cannot be disposed of in the ten minutes we have left before the naval appropriation bill comes on; and it will be merely a waste of time to take it up at this present moment. I should hope the Senate would take up the naval appropriation bill ten minutes in advance of the time that it must come up, in order that we may get forward with that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was going to ask the Senate to allow me to call up one or two pension bills reported favorably and which are on the Calendar, to which I think there will be no objection. If the Senator from Louisiana is satisfied that he cannot pass his bill——

Mr. WEST. I do not know that I am satisfied that it cannot be passed; and I think we can devote the time as profitably to the discussion of this claim as of any other claim presented by any other Senator. Whatever the Senator from Vermont has to say against the claim I shall be happy to hear, and, of course, it will have its influence with the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I cannot discuss this bill until it is up and the report is read. It may be perfectly correct; but it involves, as I say, very important considerations about repealing the statute of limitations in matters of this kind, and I do not want to embarrass my friend in having the bill considered. It ought to be considered, if it can be, taking time enough for it. I only made the suggestion that to consider it for ten minutes now, it was quite obvious, would be a mere waste of time, and suggested that we go on with the naval appropriation bill. But if my friend thinks it will do any good to take his bill up and consider it for ten minutes, reading the report, I certainly shall not have any objection.

Mr. WRIGHT. Allow me to say one word. The report was made by the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. MITCHELL,] and he remembers the particulars of this case much better than I do. So far as the removal of the bar of the statute is concerned, we found, as I remember, that this case was exceptional in its character. We have been exceedingly particular as a committee upon that very subject during the entire year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is debating the merits. The bill is not up.

Mr. WRIGHT. I know the bill is not up; but I want to explain the matter to the Senate so as to obviate the necessity of reading the report, which is quite lengthy and embodies all the facts. The committee have considered that point time and again, and we do not remove the bar and allow parties to go to the Court of Claims unless the case is exceptional. This case was regarded by the committee as exceptional, and hence they agreed to allow the party to go to the court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. WEST. Noticing the fact that the morning hour is just about expiring and that a number of Senators have little matters that they can take this opportunity of pressing through before we take up the naval appropriation bill, I withdraw the motion to call this bill up at the present time, but to-morrow morning I will make an earlier attempt; I have given way a good deal to-day; I shall make an earlier attempt to-morrow, and hope that those gentlemen who feel disposed to oppose the bill will be ready, and not make their objections then in the way of delay.

MRS. MARTHA R. ROBINSON.

Mr. THURMAN. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 2198) granting a pension to Mrs. Martha R. Robinson, of Portsmouth, Ohio, which has been reported upon favorably by the Committee on Pensions of this body after having passed the House. It will take but a moment I am quite sure.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides for placing on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha R. Robinson, widow of Major Joshua V. Robinson, late of the Thirty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT CAVANAUGH.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a similar bill granting a pension to Robert Cavanaugh on the Calendar, reported favorably. I move that the Senate proceed to consider it now.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1989) granting a pension to Robert Cavanaugh was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, Robert Cavanaugh, late a private in Company D, Ninety-eighth Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN G. TAYLOR.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 823.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 823) for the relief of John G. Taylor, of Annapolis, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is an instruction to the Secretary of the Treasury to credit John G. Taylor, of Annapolis, Maryland, in his accounts as collector of customs at Annapolis, with $127.09, the amount paid by him to John R. Briscoe, at the time of such payment acting surveyor of customs at the port of Nottingham, Maryland.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does that mean?

Mr. WRIGHT. I will explain. Mr. Briscoe was acting surveyor of customs. He applied to Mr. Taylor for the payment of his salary. Mr. Taylor having no notice that he was such officer communicated with the Treasury Department to ascertain what were the facts. He was advised that he was such officer, and he made him this payment. It turned out afterward that Mr. Briscoe had not taken the oath of office nor given the bond, and when Taylor came to settle his accounts the Department refused to allow him the amount he had thus paid for the reason that he had paid it to an officer who had not taken oath or given bond.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the evidence that he was advised by the Department that the man was an officer?

Mr. WRIGHT. By a letter to us from the Department as well as by the communication to Taylor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. From the proper officer?

Mr. WRIGHT. From the proper officer.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM RULE.

Mr. KEY. I move to take up for present consideration House bill No. 2849. It will lead to no discussion, and there will be no trouble about it, I am sure.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2849) for the relief of William Rule, postmaster at Knoxville, Tennessee, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing $600 to the credit of William Rule, in his account as postmaster at Knoxville, Tennessee, being the amount of surplus money-order funds mailed by him August 1, 1874, for deposit with the postmaster at Cincinnati; the money having been burned and destroyed with the steamboat Pat Rogers en route to Cincinnati.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a report? If there is, I wish to hear it.

Mr. KEY. There is a report accompanying that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the following report submitted by Mr. KEY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, on the 25th of May:

The Committee of the Senate on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2849) for the relief of William Rule, postmaster at Knoxville, Tennessee, having duly considered the same, ask leave to submit the following report:

The following facts are established in this case beyond controversy: William Rule was postmaster at Knoxville, Tennessee. On the 1st of August, 1874, and in accordance with the rules, regulations, and instructions of the Post-Office Department, he made up and mailed a package of the surplus money-order funds of his post-office, amounting to $600, composed of national-bank and legal-tender notes, specially described in the testimony. This package was addressed to the postmaster at Cincinnati, Ohio, and passed along and through the mail-routes, post-offices, and postal agents from Knoxville, via Chattanooga and Nashville, Tennessee, to Louisville, Kentucky, at which point it was delivered, in its due and proper course of transmission through the mails, by H. B. Jenks, clerk of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad post-office, to W. T. Hall, route agent of the Post-Office Department on the Louisville and Cincinnati river-mail route, on the steamer Pat Rogers, and, on the morning of the 5th of August, 1874, was burned and destroyed in the conflagration of said boat.

In all this Mr. Rule was in no default. He had parted with the control, custody, and possession of this money in the precise manner prescribed by law and the rules and regulations of the Post-Office Department. The custody and possession of the funds had passed completely into the hands of that Department, so that no further duty or liability remained with Mr. Rule in relation to this money. The money belonged to the Department of the Post-Office and not to Mr. Rule, who had faithfully discharged in regard thereto the duties imposed upon him.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill without amendment, and ask that it go upon the Calendar.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NANNIE HALL.

Mr. ALCORN. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill (S. No. 723) for the relief of Nannie Hall was postponed indefinitely the day before yesterday. The record of it will be found on page 28 of the RECORD of the 21st instant. I desire to enter the motion now so as to be within the three days.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 770) for the relief of Judson S. Post, of Missouri, late disbursing officer of the Navy; and

A bill (S. No. 558) making a further appropriation for the erection of Government buildings in Dover, Delaware.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 46) granting the right of way for a railroad and telegraph line to the Walla Walla and Columbia River Railroad Company across Fort Walla Walla military reservation, in Washington Territory;

A bill (S. No. 166) to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 375) for the relief of Maria W. Sanders; and

A bill (S. No. 634) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the joint-stock company of the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington," approved March 2, 1867.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SARGENT. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the Chair calls up the unfinished business, which is the naval appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3375) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

Mr. SARGENT. The condition of my health is such this morning that I shall not go into any extended statement with reference to the bill before the Senate, and trust I may be able to avoid debating the bill at any length prior to its passage. At the same time I shall be very happy to answer any questions that any Senator may wish to ask, and give any information in my power in reference to the bill.

I will state briefly that the amount of the annual estimates of the Department for the naval service the next fiscal year is $20,871,666.40. There was appropriated for the present fiscal year $17,011,306.90. The bill as reported back from the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate appropriates $16,119,290.40. The increase on the House bill is $3,685,000. The decrease from last year is $892,016.50, and of course the decrease from the estimates or the amount allowed less than the estimates is between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000.

In the amendments which the committee have reported they have endeavored, as far as possible, to concede matters of discretion in the House bill. In nearly every item in the bill as it came to the Senate there is a reduction, and in nearly every case we have assented to the reduction. There are some cases, however, where the Senate committee recommend an increase over the House bill, in the aggregate amounting to considerable; but in many of these cases the appropriation proposed is less than that of last year.

The very first amendment, which is to the first item in the bill, is an increase over last year, and is made necessary by the condition of the service. I hold in my hand a list of the officers of the United States Navy, that is to say, the number of admirals, rear-admirals, commodores, captains, commanders, lieutenant-commanders, &c., and the respective pay to each officer at sea, on shore, or other duty, or waiting orders. The bill as it comes to us from the House does not propose to reduce the number of these officers or to reduce their pay, but inadequately appropriates for their pay. The appropriations for several years past have been inadequate to reach the amount which the law requires and the deficiency has been made up from the balances of appropriations which are allowable upon the item of "pay of the Navy" because that pay necessarily runs from year to year. Seamen are enlisted for several years, and their pay, they being on foreign stations, runs on from month to month and year to year, and is received at the time they arrive with their vessels in the United States within reach of the Treasury Department, when they are finally paid off and perhaps re-enlisted or entirely discharged. This has made a necessity for continuing balances in the item of pay of the Navy, but those balances are now completely exhausted.

This roll of officers and men amounts to $7,600,000. Not a dollar less will pay them, and there is no discretion on the part of the Navy Department to pay any one who is mentioned on the roll a dollar less than the amount which is carried out in this schedule. The law fixed it in every case, and the House bill does not change the law in any case. It is mandatory on the Treasury this year to pay these amounts. The Secretary of the Navy must make requisitions for these amounts. Nevertheless, the necessary amount of appropriation is not put at the disposal of the Secretary of the Navy to pay this roll. The amount of the estimates corresponding with this roll is $7,600,000. The amount appropriated last year was $6,250,000, and, as I have said, it was not sufficient to pay the annual expenses. The House bill appropriates $5,750,000, which is $1,900,000 short of the actual necessities of the service. I do not know how it is proposed to pay the officers and seamen in the Navy under an appropriation like that. It may be that it is designed that there shall be a two-million-dollar deficiency next year. If that is so, of course the difficulty will be met, because the whole of this will not accrue in the first part of the year, and next December an appropriation can be made to pay for the rest of the year or that which is left unpaid. Still, that is not the way that we have been accustomed to legislate. I do not think it is a good way. It is much better to appropriate the amount in the regular appropriation bills and discourage deficiency bills, especially as we have stringent laws on the statute-books which prohibit the creation of deficiencies.

Mr. EATON. How much was the pay-roll of last year?

Mr. SARGENT. The pay-roll of last year was exactly the same. There is no change.

Mr. EATON. How much was appropriated?

Mr. SARGENT. The amount appropriated was $6,250,000, but there were unexpended balances running on from year to year, and had been for some years past. Now those balances are exhausted and we must look the difficulty in the face and make a sufficient appropriation.

The House, however, cut off one thousand of the men of the Navy, and the Senate Committee on Appropriations, with a good deal of reluctance I must confess, have assented to this reduction of the men, which makes a difference of $400,000, and consequently the item of amendment, instead of being $7,600,000, is $7,200,000; but I do not think the reduction is made that ought to be made. The service is top-heavy. There are too many officers in proportion to the men. The men are the least costly portion of the service, and, of course, are very useful. Whether it is possible to reduce the naval list of officers justly may be a question. Of course it would be a work of great delicacy. A large number of the officers of the Navy, both on the retired and active list, have rendered distinguished service to the country, and I suppose we all would regret harsh measures toward them by dropping them suddenly, or perhaps dropping them at all. The retired list contains many men who have become utterly disabled in the service of the country; who bear honorable wounds; who are unfit on account of their physical condition to earn their living, and are reduced to that condition by the hardships and the wounds which they endured and received in the service, and it is really a very delicate matter to deal with. Of course time will correct it, as it will with reference to our pension-rolls. Men die. Men are more liable to die who have incurred disease or received wounds disorganizing their physical system, and it may be that it is the part of patriotism, and decency even, to allow the large retired list and the active list where men have earned their positions by gallantry for the country, to remain without being cut down; but if that is so—and that is the theory of the House bill—then it is impossible to pay the roll with $5,750,000 or any sum like that. It is absolutely necessary to adopt the amendment of the Senate committee in that respect.

I say we have assented to cutting down by one thousand the men who are employed in the service. The representations which have come to the committee, especially to the subcommittee, on this matter have been very strong. The Chief of the Bureau of Equipment informs us that the effect of it will be to discharge the boys that have been in training for American seamen; that the effect of this sudden application will also be to prevent the re-enlistment of men who have been in the service for a good while, who, as their terms of enlistment expire, re-enlist again and make the best sailors we have, and with whom, under the policy of the law, there is an implied contract that they may re-enlist, and for their second or third or fourth re-enlistment receive a higher rate of pay than new hands. These are very strong considerations. Nevertheless, the House insist that there shall be this economy, and it can be done without the absolute and positive injustice that would be done by cutting down the retired list or discharging the officers who have earned their promotion by gallant service. Therefore, with a desire to yield as far as possible to the demands for economy, the Senate Committee on Appropriations, after long deliberation, determined that they would assent to this change made by the House.

With reference to the other amendments of the committee, they are somewhat large in amount, but they go to the very vital question whether we shall have a Navy afloat or not. If we have a Navy afloat, it is necessary that it should be kept in repair. Of course ships in use very rapidly deteriorate; their cordage, their spars, their sails need repair. Sometimes in hot climates, sometimes in cold, exposed to the weather and continual use, repairs are absolutely necessary. We must furnish the money with which these repairs can be made. And so with reference to the Bureau of Yards and Docks, auxiliary to this very purpose. It is necessary that it should be kept up with some degree of efficiency.

I do not know what the ultimate fate of the bill may be in a committee of conference. The Committee on Appropriations have endeavored, while meeting the House as far as they could, to make the bill that which is absolutely necessary for the service, and I will ask the Senate to stand by the committee in these particulars, because we have endeavored to be just and reasonable just so far as the demand for economy is concerned, not unreasonable in asking money for the actual wants of the service. If subsequently, in a committee of conference, it may be necessary to reduce these items, I shall feel as if the interest of the service absolutely required the passage of the naval appropriation bill, and be disposed to do whatever may be just and reasonable in that respect.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, it is admitted on all hands that the expenses of the Government must be reduced, or there must be additional taxes levied upon the people, or we must do what no government ought to do in a time of peace, borrow money to defray the ordinary expenses of the Government. The falling off of the revenue in the present fiscal year is not less, I believe, as stated by any one, than nine or ten millions of dollars, and some Senators estimate it at double that sum. The probable decrease of the revenue for the coming fiscal year, as estimated by Senators who have paid much attention to that subject, is stated by none I think at less than sixteen millions of dollars and by some as high as forty millions. It is, therefore, perfectly clear that we must do one of these three things: we must lessen expenditures, or we must increase taxes, or we must borrow money and increase the public debt to carry on the ordinary operations of the Government. Now, I suppose, there is not one Senator on this floor who would be willing to borrow money to pay the ordinary expenses of the Government unless it were in an emergency when no other means could be resorted to; and therefore that is to be dismissed. We are brought, then, to the choice between increasing the taxation of the country or lessening expenses.

I am not going into any declamation about the weight and burden of taxation resting on the American people, imposed by every form of government, from the Federal Government down to the lowest municipality in the land. Every one knows that; and every one knows that this great burden of taxation is one of the causes, and a very potent cause, of the depression in the business of the land. I think, therefore, no one proposes just now to increase taxation. It seems to be admitted on all hands that that is not practicable. We are left, then, to no other mode whatsoever to bring our expenses within our means than a reduction of expenses.

Now, as has been truly said by the Senator from California, this is a very delicate subject; and it is impossible to execute any system of reduction—I do not care what it is; I do not care how wisely and thoroughly it may be considered—without its operating hardly, grievously indeed, upon some class of citizens, or at least upon some individuals. But we must make these reductions, or we must find that we are without the means to carry on the Government. In respect to reductions in the naval service, nothing was more just than the remarks of the Senator from California about the difficulty of discharging officers of the Navy; but there was another consideration that he did not mention, and which has always had great influence with me in considering the case of those who have been a long time in the naval service, and that is that the very fact that they have been in that service almost disqualifies them for any other occupation. A man who has been forty years, for instance, in the naval service, as most of the retired officers have been—some of them fifty years and more; one of them, I believe, sixty years—is absolutely, I may say, disqualified for those pursuits of civil life which would be necessary to gain him a livelihood. It would be treating him with very great hardship indeed, after having had the benefit of all the best years of his life, to turn him out without support in the last days of his existence. There is great difficulty in that, and therefore I have turned my attention to that point, and I moved at the last session of Congress an amendment—not upon the naval bill, but upon the Military Academy bill, which stands upon pretty much the same footing—to lessen the appointments to the naval and military schools.

Mr. CRAGIN. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CRAGIN. At the last session we passed an act requiring six years as the term of study at the Annapolis Academy, which practically reduces by one-third the number of officers entering the Navy, which will gradually decrease the number. It has not been done at the Military Academy.

Mr. THURMAN. I am aware of that, and it was a move in the right direction, and I do not know but that it can be carried still further. My impression is that there are more appointees than there is any necessity for both at West Point and Annapolis. I do not see the necessity of every member of the House of Representatives appointing a cadet at West Point or Annapolis, the representation increasing all the while. It is taking a set of young men, very meritorious indeed, none more so, to be educated at the public expense for the naval or military service and bringing them as subaltern officers every year into the service far beyond the demands of the service. I have been in hopes that the Military and Naval Committees would address themselves to that end of the service, so to speak, and lessen the number of officers who are going into the Navy. It is very true that that might be done much more advantageously in the Army than in the Navy; for naval education is a specialty. You can make good Army officers out of men who never were in military life. I can see before me in this Senate men who never belonged to anything but a militia company, but who served gallantly and efficiently in the war and came out with the epaulets of a major-general and did good service. You can do that in the Army; but you cannot pick up a landsman and make a seaman out of him in a day. You cannot pick up a man from the service of the ordinary mercantile marine of the country and make a good naval officer of him in a day, or a month, or perhaps in a year. There is, therefore, a greater necessity for always having a body of thoroughly educated naval officers than there is for having a body of thoroughly educated military officers at a military school; and although I would be very far from abolishing the West Point Academy and believe that it is well for the country to educate young men both for the military and for the naval service, yet I do think that a very considerable reduction might be made in that direction by cutting down the number of cadets at West Point without in any wise impairing the efficiency of that very noted and very meritorious academy.

I am getting off the naval bill and on to the military now, but it is all germane to this subject of reduction. I have heard it said, and said by officers, "You cannot do that; if you reduce the number of cadets at West Point too much you destroy the school." Not so, sir. If you were to reduce the number one-half there would be still more there than there were fifty years ago; and I think that the attention of those who have military subjects in charge ought to be directed to lessening our expenses in that direction. It will not relieve our present necessities, but it will tend to lessen the expenses in the future.

Mr. President, having made these general remarks on the subject, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from California, who has this bill in charge, and also of the Senate, to some of the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations. If the Senator is entirely right in saying that the pay-roll requires $7,200,000, then I say that the right way to do is to appropriate the money and not have a deficiency bill; and the right way is to appropriate the money rather than to let the pay-roll be eked out by balances of old appropriations which were not made for the purpose of the pay-roll at all, or by the use of money that has been obtained by the Department from the sale of old ships or condemned stores, or the like. Therefore, if the estimate is right that we must have $7,200,000 to meet the pay-roll, there is but one way to do, and that is to vote the money.

But now, turning over the bill, I come to page 13, where our committee propose an increase over the House bill of a million dollars for the Bureau of Construction and Repair, and I think it unfortunate that they propose to strike out a part of the section as it comes from the House. The House appropriate $1,500,000 for the Bureau of Construction and Repair. Our committee propose to increase that to $2,500,000, making an increase of a million dollars, and to strike out this clause in the section:

> And that the sum of $200,000 of the above sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used in employment of labor to put the live-oak timber in the different yards in wet docks, and labor for that purpose shall be employed during the months of July, August, or September, and shall be discharged before the 1st of October, 1876; and during the months of October and November of the year 1876 there shall not be exceeding fifty persons borne on the lists as laborers at any navy-yard at the expense of the Government.

I do not know what is the necessity or propriety of using $200,000 of this appropriation for putting live-oak timber into wet docks. That is a matter upon which I have no information. I do not know whether the House is right or whether our committee is right in respect to that subject; but I do think that this provision in the bill that during the months of October and November of the year 1876 there shall not be exceeding fifty persons borne on the list as laborers at any navy-yard at the expense of the Government ought not to be stricken out.

I shall be quite frank about this; I have nothing to conceal. The fact is notorious; it has been abundantly proved that hands are taken on at navy-yards in anticipation of elections, men who are not needed at all taken on by hundreds, men who are not needed and who render no service for the money that is paid them or no material service to the Government, but who are kept there and paid by the Government until they have cast their votes in the direction that is required, and then are discharged from the service. It was to remedy that evil, it was to remedy that perversion of the public money, it was to remedy that corrupt interference in elections, it was to put an end to a practice that is injurious to the naval service as well as demoralizing to the country, that the House very properly put in that provision in respect to the number of laborers that should be employed at any navy-yard during the months of October and November.

If this were mere clamor, if this were mere vague rumor that such things had been done, I should attach no importance to it, for I am not given to clamor against any man's reputation; I am not given to repeating vague rumors prejudicial to any man's reputation. I do not believe in any such mode of procedure, certainly not any such mode of political tactics; but this is a fact which I think any Senator can test for himself by the least investigation. Any one who will look into the testimony taken this very session by the House committee will see that the fact is undeniable that hundreds of men have been "taken on," as it is called, at the navy-yards previous to an election without necessity, paid out of the public funds for services not rendered, or which were not needed, and discharged as soon as the election was over and they had deposited their votes in the direction for which they were employed.

There is no necessity for striking out this clause. It may be said,

"Who can anticipate what will be the condition of the country next October and November; there may be a great necessity for work in the navy-yards then; and are you going to limit the number to fifty?" I think, Mr. President, that we need fear no war next October or November; I think we need fear no war with any naval power that will require any great activity in the Navy Department. I think it is much safer for us to rely upon the existence of peace next October and next November than it is to leave the door open to practices that are dishonoring to the naval service and injurious to the country.

I hope, therefore, that the last clause, in relation to the number of laborers who may be employed at any navy-yard in October or November, will not be stricken out; and I am also inclined to hope, until I hear some satisfactory explanation from the Senator who has this bill in charge, that we shall not consent to the amendment increasing this appropriation by the sum of $1,000,000. The Senator's attention has not been called to it, and he has not explained, except in a very general way, why this increase is made. He says that if we are to have a Navy at all there must be a Bureau of Construction and Repair, and that Bureau must have, necessarily, a great deal to do.

Mr. SARGENT. I did not say anything about the Bureau. I said we had to keep ships in repair.

Mr. THURMAN. The Bureau of Construction and Repair has that work in charge; and so that was the idea. I do not mean to use the exact words of the Senator. Nobody doubts that they are to keep it in repair as far as necessary; but no reason is given yet for this increase. I shall make no criticism until I hear what reason can be given why the estimate of our committee is better than the estimate of the House committee and of the House itself. They supposed that $1,500,000 would be sufficient. Our committee thinks it should be increased by $1,000,000; but, until I can hear some good reasons for it, and very strong reasons too, I shall be opposed to that increase.

As I said before, we must begin retrenchment, and I do not know anywhere where we can better begin retrenchment than in this very matter of construction and repair of the Navy. While I am a friend of the Navy, and always have been, it must be admitted that of all the service in the country it is the service which, in case of absolute necessity, could be dispensed with the easiest and with the least injury to the public.

Turning again to another matter, in the Bureau of Yards and Docks the committee move to increase the appropriation from $440,000 to $760,000, making an increase of $320,000. I invite the attention of my friend from California to this item, and hope he will explain why in the opinion of our committee that increase is necessary. It is the same in respect to the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, on page 9. The committee propose to increase the appropriation from $970,000 to $1,250,000, being an increase of $280,000. I should like to know why that is done.

There is a very small item on page 3 to which I will also ask the attention of my friend. "Pilotage" is included among the things that are appropriated for in line 48, and then on page 4, line 74, "pilotage" is again appropriated for. The sums are small, but I do not know why there should be two appropriations for "pilotage."

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. One is for pilotage of vessels in distress and the other is for naval vessels.

Mr. THURMAN. The bill does not say so. This bill is far better framed than any naval appropriation bill that I have seen since I came into the Senate. I have seen bills passed here with seven and eight millions of dollars in a single item of appropriation with the objects of appropriation all grouped together.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator is mistaken in regard to the pilotage. In line 47 it is for "relief of vessels in distress and pilotage," and on page 4 it is "for foreign and local pilotage and towage of ships of war."

Mr. THURMAN. If they are distinct things, well and good; but that does not appear from the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. One is under the head of "contingent expenses of the Navy Department" and the other relates to the general service abroad and at home.

Mr. THURMAN. It is a small matter, and I only wished to call attention to it.

These, Mr. President, are all the observations that I wish to make. What I rose principally to do was to impress as I was able upon the Senate the fact that we have to increase taxation or reduce expenditures. It has been thought that the House of Representatives has been going wild on this subject; but I think any one who will consider the fact I have stated, that our revenue for this fiscal year has fallen off not less than $10,000,000, and according to some Senators' estimates twice that sum, that a further reduction in the revenue is certain to take place in the next fiscal year, and that we have no more revenue now than is actually needed, must see that when we are brought face to face with the proposition we must either add to the already onerous burdens of taxation that exist or we must reduce expenditures. No one can properly say that the House has gone wild on this subject. Certainly they have gone in the right direction. I do not know but that they may have erred in details. I am not familiar enough with the subjects of appropriation bills to say that they have not erred in details; but that they have been going in the right direction, and that the Senate ought to meet them in the same spirit, it does seem to me to be as clear as any proposition can be. I think, if there should be a failure of appropriation bills at the end of this fiscal year, a dead lock, we shall not be free from responsibility; the responsibility cannot be cast upon the Representatives of the people. It may be that they will be to blame; it may be that we shall be to blame; but certainly it seems to me that, if the Senate will meet the House in the same spirit of retrenchment and economy that the House have evinced, there will be no dead lock in the appropriation bills at the end of the fiscal year, but that they will all be passed, and the means for carrying on the Government provided.

Mr. SARGENT. It was my purpose to remark upon the amendments in their order as we reached them, and I did not attempt to explain anything in my former remarks, except the first amendment only, which would soon be reached and voted upon. I thought the explanation I gave was satisfactory to the Senator from Ohio. At any rate, he seems to adopt the same theory that I did in reference to it. He, however, calls my attention to a peculiarity of the House bill, on page 13, with reference to the employment of force in the navy-yards in October and November next. I am not surprised—as this is what might be called a political item—that the Senator from Ohio deems it of a great deal of importance. My impression is that anything of a political nature which the other House can get into appropriation bills and compel the Senate to accept as a condition to the Government continuing to run at all ought to be important to bolster up the failing fortunes of my friend's party.

Mr. THURMAN. That is the wrong word.

Mr. SARGENT. My friend says that I use the wrong word. I use it deliberately; I think, understandingly and prophetically. If I desired, however, to take an advantage of the democratic party, I could not see my way clearer to it than by allowing a provision like that to go into the bill, provided the people could be convinced it was put there and insisted upon at the instance of the democratic Representatives and Senators and that we could only get this bill by means of our assent to it. During the months of October and November men are to be kept out of employment for fear they will vote the republican ticket. I should like to go into the town of Vallejo with two or three thousand people to hear me, as they would assemble, and say to them, "You have been out of employment for months; your families have been suffering; here at the end of this month of October, and all through the next month of November, though the election takes place on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, you are to be kept out of employment. The Government has work for you to do; there are funds in the Treasury to pay for it; but you cannot have it for fear you might be influenced perhaps to vote the republican ticket; and you know who insisted that this should be so; you know who are the guardians of your political consciences; you know who they were who said that you and your children should not have bread under the circumstances; they were your democratic friends in Congress." Do you think no argument could be drawn from a proposition like that? Do you not know it is a two-edged sword, and that it would show you were afraid to employ laborers, and denied them bread, lest they turn republicans?

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SARGENT. I yield with great pleasure.

Mr. DAVIS. My friend spoke of the navy-yard in his section of the country. If I am not misinformed it would make very little difference there, because I am told no man can get work there if he does not vote the republican ticket. Therefore the party cannot gain much by telling the story which now he is relating to us, because all of them have to vote the republican ticket or get no work.

Mr. SARGENT. I presume whatever rule my friend supposes to exist there he will admit exists everywhere.

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly, in the navy-yards.

Mr. SARGENT. Then the argument would apply elsewhere as well as there. My impression is that it has been the rule from time immemorial in all the navy-yards, when democratic administrations were in power they gave the preference to democrats for office and employment, and the republicans have done the same thing. If you object to it, you object to the consistent course of your own party, and the same course it will pursue again if it comes into power on the 4th of March next. It is a tradition, and laughed at in my State, that one of my democratic predecessors on this floor insisted upon the appointment as superintendent of dry-docks of a man who was totally unfit for the place. It was represented to him that this man was not fit for the office, that he could not discharge the duties, &c. He said: "I do not want him there because he is fit for it, but I want him for the office;" and the man was appointed.

I have always noticed that parties out of power are spasmodically proper and honest and virtuous; but let them get into office and they are about as good as the average of mankind, and no better.

These appropriations come into force on the 1st day of July, or are presumed to do so. I hope they will do so this year. From that time until winter comes is the time which can be best devoted to labor. The days then are longer, men are not hurried by darkness away from their work; they do not work in the cold and the snow. From July until the 1st of December is the best time for the purposes of Government to have this work done, and as a rule it is done during that time. An election occurs during those months, and that work, it is said, must not be done for fear the workmen will vote the republican ticket. That is the logic of it. It is really to the advantage of the Government that the work shall be done during those months.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me interrupt him?

Mr. SARGENT. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. When the House said that not more than fifty men should be employed in any navy-yard in those months, I take it that it was not done without a knowledge of what the exigencies of the service require. They have estimated, certainly, that that number will be sufficient for the public service at that time, and my remarks were based upon the supposition that that estimate is correct. If the Senator will convince me that fifty men in a navy-yard will not be sufficient at that time, I shall vote to increase the number until it is sufficient. I have not any objection to having a sufficient number of men to do all that the Government needs done; but I am opposed to having men employed who are not required to do anything that the Government needs to have done.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, I am not able to fix the number that the Government needs. I am not the Secretary of the Navy or the Chief of the Bureau of Construction. I know that the Government needs a certain amount of money in order to keep its Navy in repair. We appropriate that amount from year to year—we must do so—and leave something to the discretion of those having the matter in charge as to how it shall be employed; but I deny that the evidence shows that men for whom the Government has no use are employed in the navy-yards about the time of election, and set about no useful employment. That there may be a great many men employed during the summer months and discharged some time late in November is unquestionably true; yet, so far as my observation has gone, the men are usefully employed and the Government money is expended for proper purposes. That is the fact, so far as I know, and I say that in my reading of the testimony which has been taken on the other side there is nothing inconsistent with this position or nothing worthy the name of testimony. It may be said that a great many men were at work about the time of elections, and the inference is that they were needlessly so, so far as Government work is concerned. If you want me to stand here and say that the republican party is in every respect immaculate or that the democratic party would be, if it came into power, in every respect diabolical, I say nothing of the kind. I say, however, that if my friend from Ohio were elected to the Presidency of the United States, for which he is named, (and if we are to have a democratic President I wish he should be the one,) I would expect an honest and fair administration. I do not believe that because the democratic party should come into power everything would necessarily go to ruin. I think there would still be some hope for the country. I caution my democratic friends against believing every statement of suspicion or breath of slander against the republicans. Concede to us, at any rate, that we endeavor to administer the Government with decency and fairness; and that, so far as we can, the general purpose is to do right; that when we ask for appropriations here it is not in order to influence elections, but it is because the Navy needs repair, and that the summer months of the year are those in which it is best to have the work done.

To justify me in saying that this is a political item, I may be allowed to allude to another bill which is laid upon our tables, wherein I find in an appropriation for defraying the expenses of the Supreme Court and the circuit and district courts of the United States, including jurors and witnesses, expenses of suits in which the United States are concerned, safe keeping of prisoners, &c., the following proviso:

Provided, That all of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to the registration of voters and the appointment of supervisors of elections and deputy and special deputy marshals, and touching the supervision of elections, are hereby repealed.

Is that fair? Is it fair to require the wheels of government to stop, that there shall be no light-house service, that there shall be no completion of public buildings, no Signal Service, none of the various matters which are provided for in this great sundry civil bill, unless all the barriers which have been put up against frauds in elections are swept away? I suppose no one can doubt that in our great cities there are enormous frauds committed upon the elective franchise, that men are often fraudulently registered, that men are repeaters, that illegal votes are cast, that decent votes are excluded. The United States having the right to guard the purity of elections of members of Congress, and electors going to the very foundation and inception of the Government, having the right to exercise this power, and having by the development and prevention of fraud tended toward a true ballot, real self-government by the people, all this must be swept away before we can have any money to carry out the ordinary operations of the Government in these important Departments!

I do not know whether my friend from Ohio will get up and insist, when the time comes and the sundry civil bill is under consideration, that the clause I have read must be adopted because the House has a discretion which is superior to that of the Senate; that it has a discretion which we ought to listen to for everything and doubt ourselves when we differ from that body. I trust he will not be betrayed into that position, because there are some positions which even party zeal does not excuse.

Mr. THURMAN. May I call the attention of my friend to a fact?

Mr. SARGENT. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to ask the Senator if the very provisions proposed to be repealed were not enacted in an appropriation bill?

Mr. SARGENT. Very likely; but they were not the conditions of an appropriation; because the appropriation bill would have been passed without them or with them; but here these provisions of law are to be swept away as a condition of appropriation.

The amount appropriated last year for the Bureau of Construction and Repair was $3,300,000. The Senate committee assent to a reduction to $2,500,000, a reduction of $800,000. Even to make that amount of reduction we have got to stop all work in putting the iron-clads in repair. There are ten single-turreted and five double-turreted, which are being repaired, some of them nearly completed, which will be worth more, when they are finished, for effective war purposes than they were originally; they will be comparatively indestructible. Out of the ordinary appropriation, without asking special appropriations for the purpose, the Department has been repairing them year by year. I do not think this work ought be stopped; but it will have to be stopped provided we reduce this Bureau from the appropriation of last year $800,000. If you reduce it still further than that you will not be able to carry on the repairs of the ordinary vessels and send them to sea at all.

The other items of the bill I will consider when we reach them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. SPENCER in the chair.) The Chief Clerk will read the bill, and the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will be acted upon in their order when reached in the reading of the bill.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 14, to increase the appropriation "for pay of commissioned and warrant officers at sea, on shore, on special service, and of those on the retired list and unemployed, and for the actual expenses of officers traveling under orders, and for pay of the petty officers, seamen, ordinary seamen, landsmen, and boys, including men of the engineers' force, and for the Coast Survey service, (seven thousand five hundred men,)" from $5,750,000 to $7,200,000.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I do not propose to be drawn into a political discussion here to-day. We shall have time enough for that by and by. I shall propose at the outset a measure in which the Senate may agree with the House, and I trust the Senators who have this bill in charge will concur in it. I understand from the Senator from California that the seventy-five hundred men here spoken of is a reduction of one thousand from what the number was last year. Therefore I submit that the House committee in making their appropriation of $5,750,000 have taken into consideration the less amount to be paid, there being a reduction of one thousand men. I ask my friend from California if $6,250,000, the same amount which was last year appropriated, will not be sufficient this year, when one thousand less men are employed by the Department. I feel disposed, so far as possible, to put the bill in such a shape as that both Houses will agree to it. I am perfectly willing to make this sum $6,250,000, so that when the conference committee of the two Houses meet, if possible, they may agree upon the bill. I make the suggestion to the Senator from California, hoping he will see it in the same light that I do, in order that we may pass the bill through a conference without difficulty and delay.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to show the Senator the pay-roll under this item of $6,250,000. If the Senator will step to my seat he will see that this roll begins with the Admiral. His pay per annum is put on and carried out. Then come the rear-admirals, six of them at sea, four of them on other duty, two waiting orders, and the total is carried out.

Mr. EATON. I understand that.

Mr. SARGENT. And following this footing-up, running all the way down through these several officers, the aggregate is $7,600,000. I should be very happy indeed to have some one show a mistake in it; and if these figures are not right there must be a mistake.

Mr. THURMAN. That is the list for the coming fiscal year?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. Is there not a bill now pending for the reduction of the pay of those men?

Mr. SARGENT. I am not personally aware of such a bill, but there may be. There is nothing of the kind in this bill.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know that it is a matter of any materiality; but if that bill should pass, this sum would not be needed.

Mr. SARGENT. I am not aware, however, of such a bill. I am not entirely sure that a bill could not be devised which would root out some persons who are less deserving than others of being upon the Navy pay-roll; but at any rate that has not been done up to this time, and we are confronted with this roll. It is a question of mathematics. I can only say to my friend that I cannot see that two and two make five. It is a matter of impossibility to do that. If it is suggested that it would be wise under all the circumstances to make this $6,250,000, and that if it is not sufficient we can next December make it right, I would say that perhaps that is one way out of the difficulty.

Mr. EATON. I am disposed to deal fairly, I would say to the Senator from California. The pay-roll is less by half a million this year than last in round numbers. In other words, a thousand men are stricken out of the list.

Mr. SARGENT. Four hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. EATON. Very well; $400,000 less. If $6,250,000 was enough last year——

Mr. SARGENT. It was not.

Mr. EATON. Wait one moment; I have not got through. If $6,250,000 was enough last year, surely $6,250,000 ought to be enough this year when you have a thousand men less to pay. I understand it to be the fact, and I suppose the Senator from California understands the same thing, that a great deal of property is sold by the Navy Department, the proceeds thereof held by the Department, and moneys that are gotten by the sale of such property are used for any purpose that may be deemed necessary by the Department.

Mr. CRAGIN. The Senator will allow me to say that in the case of all property that is sold by the Navy Department the money has to be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. EATON. Is it covered into the Treasury?

Mr. CRAGIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. EATON. When was that law passed?

Mr. CRAGIN. Two or three years ago.

Mr. SARGENT. It is the law now in all the Departments.

Mr. CRAGIN. It applies to the sale of all vessels and old materials. I do not know how it would be if a few chips were sold at a navy-yard bringing five or ten dollars. I am not sure whether that amount would be covered in or not; but the proceeds of all vessels and old material of any value are required to be put in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. EATON. I should like to try this proposition, any way. I want to go as far as I can. My friend from California, I know, appreciates my motives in this matter. I will not go into a political discussion, I leave that to others; but nothing is truer than the proposition stated by my distinguished friend from Ohio. Certainly our revenue is falling off. No Senator will say that the falling off in revenue is less than nine or ten million dollars this year. In my judgment it is $15,000,000. No mind that examines this question can fail to be thoroughly satisfied that the falling off in the revenue the coming year will not be less than from twenty to thirty million dollars. It may be extravagant to say $40,000,000, as some gentlemen do say who have given this matter a very thorough examination. Let us agree, if possible, upon an appropriation bill here that the conference committee of the Senate will be able, when they meet the other conference committee, to agree upon. I hope my friend will consent to this. I move no amendment, but leave it to him. If my friend would move, instead of $7,200,000, to make the item $6,250,000, I should be very glad to vote for this clause in the appropriation bill. I do not desire to see any meritorious officer who has been wounded in the service of the country stricken from the rolls, and I should be glad to vote for the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 55, to increase the appropriation "for the civil establishment of the several navy-yards" from $85,000 to $100,000.

Mr. EATON. I should like to know why $15,000 is added by this amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. This item includes the whole civil establishment of the navy-yards. The amount appropriated for this fiscal year was $158,000. The amount of the estimates is $160,000. The House cut it down to $85,000. We did not put it at $158,000, because we wanted to be economical as well as the House, and we put it at $100,000. Three years ago on my motion the appropriation for the whole civil service of the navy-yards was reduced 40 per cent. in the naval bill then in my charge in the House of Representatives.

Mr. EATON. A wise movement.

Mr. SARGENT. We cut them then as close as possible, I thought; and I cannot for my life now see how the service can be run on $100,000. The Secretary of the Navy says he will try and if possible run it on $100,000, but to attempt it on $85,000 is absolutely out of the question. We have not only compromised with the House on this matter, but have come almost to them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next is a verbal amendment in line 66, striking out the word "and" where it twice occurs. That will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suggest to the Senator from California that in line 71 "herewith" should be changed to "hereby," so as to read, "hereby appropriated."

Mr. SARGENT. Very well; I ask that that change be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is a verbal amendment. The Secretary will make the change.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriation for the Bureau of Navigation, in line 75, to increase the item "for foreign and local pilotage and towage of ships of war" from $45,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEY. I suggest that the reading of that portion of the bill be dispensed with where there is no difference between the bill and the amendments of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that course will be pursued. The Chair hears no objection, and only the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be read.

Mr. SARGENT. On behalf of the committee, on page 7, after line 139, I move to insert the words:

For expenses of Nautical Almanac, namely.

This is really a verbal correction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in lines 188 and 189, under the head "Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting," to increase the appropriation "for equipment of vessels: For coal for steamers' and ships' use, including expenses of transportation; storage, labor, hemp, wire, and other materials for the manufacture of rope; hides, cordage, canvas, leather; iron for manufacture of cables, anchors, and galleys; condensing and boat detaching apparatus; cables, anchors, furniture, hose, bake-ovens, and cooking-stoves; life-rafts for monitors; heating-apparatus for receiving-ships, and for the payment of labor in equipping vessels, and manufacture of articles in the several navy-yards," from $970,000 to $1,250,000.

Mr. EATON. Here is an increase over the appropriation made by the House of $280,000. I hope the honorable Senator from California will give some reason why this large increase should be made.

Mr. SARGENT. I will do so with pleasure. The amount appropriated for this present fiscal year is $1,250,000, and the estimate is $1,500,000. The Bureau and the Secretary inform us that this amount is absolutely necessary, that they need it for coal for steamers' and ships' use; for storage, labor, hemp, wire, and other materials for the manufacture of rope; for hides, cordage, canvas, leather; iron for manufacture of cables, anchors, and galleys, and so on through a long list of articles which are mentioned from line 178 to line 188. They say that they cannot buy these things with the amount that is appropriated by the House bill. They are willing to forego the estimate, which was $250,000 more than the amount for the present year, but that they need the amount we propose to supply; that they have not had any more during the present year than was necessary to keep the vessels afloat; that they cannot keep them afloat unless they have the coal, anchors, &c., which are provided for in this item, and that this amount is necessary to buy an adequate supply of these materials.

This seems like a general statement, and yet it is the result of careful inquiry, because the Senator from Virginia who was with me upon the subcommittee [Mr. WITHERS] and myself personally examined this matter, conversed with the Secretary of the Navy upon the subject, and endeavored to inform ourselves, and to reduce where reduction was possible. We came to the conclusion that upon this item and one or two others which seem to be large in amount the bill must be increased. You must remember that a navy is a large thing. It is an expensive machine if we are to have one at all, and certainly a nation like this should have a navy. I say that with a desire to be as economical as possible we still found in reference to these items that we had to make substantial additions not above the amount now being expended, generally below the amount now being expended, but somewhat higher than the House allowed. This is all I can say as the result of our inquiry.

Mr. EATON. I understand the Senator from California to say that this is the same amount which was expended last year. Now I propose that we do not expend as much this year as we did last year. I undertake to say that in the condition of the Treasury we ought to expend less upon this very branch of the public service; and if cutting off $250,000 upon this one item will reduce the number of ships that we may send to sea, so be it, and let them lie up in ordinary. Nothing can be truer than that we must reduce our expenditures, or, as the Senator from Ohio very properly remarked, increase our taxation or borrow money in a time of peace. Now, I say that this is one of the items that ought to be reduced, that can be reduced. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not know that I wish to go into the discussion of the financial aspect of this matter. The chairman of the Committee on Finance, perhaps, is the one to whom that subject ought to be left. But when I see that during the past month we paid off between two and three millions of the public debt; that the month before that we paid off between two and three millions of the public debt, and that every month for months past we have reduced the public debt from one to three million dollars, I do not understand these continual jeremiads over the terrible state of our finances. There is some indefinite shadow of a sinking fund which is held up here before our eyes; and though we have reduced the public debt by anywhere from ten to fifty million dollars within a certain year, we are told that we still owe the sinking fund a large amount of money; and that is the reason and the only reason that can be given why we shall not make decent and adequate appropriations for the expenses of the Government. Why, sir, we are to withdraw our ships from the Asiatic waters, or the Mediterranean Sea, or anywhere else where they are necessary to watch our commerce and protect the interests of our citizens abroad, and lay them all up in ordinary, on the ground that our finances are so deranged that we have got to borrow money. Borrow money for what? We are told that our income has fallen off during the present year some $15,000,000 or more. We are reducing the debt monthly by millions. If the revenues have fallen off, I do not see why we have to borrow money when we are continually reducing the public debt, and have a surplus for that purpose. I do not think there is any force at all in the argument. Last year, just as Congress adjourned, we set in motion an entirely new system of internal revenue and of collection of duties; we put a horizontal elevation upon one and an increase upon the other; and the result was considerable confusion and the holding up of stocks on hand rather than paying the difference in taxes. At that time the Senator from Ohio, the chairman of the Finance Committee, [Mr. SHERMAN,] warned the country that the effect would be that our revenues would fall off. He said, "For the coming year you will not collect as much revenue as you would if you allowed the old revenue laws to stand; that which is apparently designed to increase the revenue will have the opposite effect."

I was not convinced by his reasoning at that time and voted against him. I do not see him in his seat, but I may state that at least three times this present session he has reminded me of the wisdom of his remarks then made. I admit their wisdom now. I voted against him, and the measure passed by a very close vote. I believe we should have had more revenue collected if we had kept the old system, but I think that is only a temporary condition of things, because as the old stocks on hand are exhausted new ones must be imported or new articles manufactured liable to internal-revenue taxes, and when the enhanced taxes come into operation they necessarily will produce an increase in the receipts of the Treasury; so that for the next fiscal year, instead of judging by the present and presuming that there will be a decrease, common sense would seem to imply that there is likely to be an increase. Certainly there will be, taking the theory of the chairman of the Committee on Finance at the time the last revenue bill was passed.

Now, sir, I am not disposed to have our ships laid up in ordinary. I think that the brilliant little Navy which we have ought to be kept actively employed. It is not straining the national resources for us to have ships stationed here and there, picketing the waters of the globe, where our flag can occasionally be seen by our seamen and our American citizens who may be abroad, and in case of disaster or of difficulty in which they may be involved furnish them the relief which a great Government should be ready to give to its citizens abroad.

I might relate to my friend from Connecticut many instances during this present and the past fiscal year where the Navy Department has been suddenly called on in different parts of the globe for such assistance as our national vessels could render, and those vessels have been kept busy plying from station to station on duties which were of very great importance, for a navy is important in time of peace as well as in time of war. Of course, its great usefulness and necessity are when we are assailed or need to strike an enemy; but its usefulness is great also in time of peace, when it acts like a guardian of our commerce and carries our flag to foreign shores where our citizens may wander for purposes of business or pleasure, and there it gives them a sense of security under the shadow of the American name. Therefore, I think that it would be supreme folly to lay up our ships in ordinary and dismantle our Navy, to abdicate the position of a maritime power, and all to save $250,000.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, of course the Senator from California will display his own taste in expressing his judgment on the questions that arise on this bill. But it seems strange to me that when a Senator rises here and says that, in his judgment, a certain amount is not necessary; that $250,000 less will answer the purposes of the Department, and that the condition of the Treasury, that the condition of the country is such as to demand at our hands retrenchment and reform wherever practicable, that expression should be called a jeremiad. It may be good taste or it may not be. And we are told that it is absolutely a want of common sense to talk about the fact, which is well known, that there is not a single financier in the United States of any character, no matter what his political views may be, who does not assert to the country that the income of the Government for the coming fiscal year will be from twenty to forty millions of dollars less than the last. And yet we are told that it is a want of common sense to announce a proposition of that character on the floor of this Senate. I have no idea that the ships of the United States are to be laid up in ordinary by cutting down this branch of the expenditure $250,000. I have no idea but that the flag of the country will float all over the world. Wherever there is water enough to bear an American bottom there it will go. Our sailors will be protected, our people will be protected, even if we cut down this item of expenditure $250,000.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I have no disposition to oppose any proper appropriation for the Navy of the country. I remember with pride the glorious achievements of our Navy in the past history of the country, and I would be among the last men to cripple that service or do injustice to it in any respect; but, in my opinion, the sentiment uttered by the Senator from Connecticut is a very just one, that the financial condition of this country requires vigilance on the part of the Senate in order that the expenses of this Government may be curtailed at every proper point.

The House of Representatives have sent here a bill declaring as their judgment that for the special objects contemplated by this item $970,000 are sufficient. That judgment was arrived at not captiously, but upon examination, because we all know that during the present session of the House of Representatives there have been thorough investigations into these branches of the public service, and after most careful investigation the committee of the House of Representatives have reported to the House and the House have adopted and sent to the Senate for its concurrence a proposition for this special branch of the service, appropriating $970,000; and it is now proposed to increase that to $1,250,000, an increase of $280,000 over the appropriation deemed proper by the House of Representatives. May we not justly inquire whether it is not time to pause and to see whether the amount named in the bill as it came from the House may not be an appropriate and proper appropriation to make for this service?

The Senator from California seems to treat with contempt any suggestions from others in reference to this service.

Mr. SARGENT. I trust my friend will not do me injustice.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not mean to do so.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator from Connecticut also on that point misunderstood me or misinterpreted me. I shall leave unchanged everything that I have said; but I object to being thus misrepresented. I have no such feeling toward any fellow-Senator. I have not intended to use language implying it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I misunderstood the Senator if that was not his intention. I certainly would not do injustice to the Senator from California or any other Senator on this floor. I concede to the Senator from California a familiarity with naval affairs much greater than I possess; but an honest difference of opinion may be entertained; and when I look back at the expenditures for the naval service, when I remember that within the last sixteen years there have been more than $500,000,000 expended on the naval service of this country, I am justified in the belief, when I look at the present condition of the Navy, that there has been an injudicious and unwise, if not an extravagant, expenditure of the public money. Why, sir, in the last eight years, during the existence of the present Administration, there have been more than $175,000,000 expended for the Navy of this country. And what have we to show for it? Your Navy to-day is not in as good condition, as I am informed—I have but little personal knowledge in this matter—as it was in 1860; and yet during the Administration of President Grant you have spent $175,000,000, averaging for the last eight years not less than $22,000,000 a year. What is the condition of our Navy to-day? I remember that only a few years ago the Secretary of the Navy detailed in his report the deplorable condition of the Navy.

Sir, it is high time that we should be giving diligent attention to the expenditures of money in this department of the public service. While we maintain the efficiency of our Navy, while we appropriate for maintaining and are proud to maintain the efficiency of that service which has done honor to the country, and ought to do it no injustice whatever, we ought, I say, carefully to inspect the expenditure of this money, especially in this time of general depression of the industries of the country, when the revenues of the Government are falling off, when industry is not properly rewarded, when thousands of men are out of employment, and when paralysis seems to have seized on every industrial interest of the country. It is time we had reduced the expenditures of this Government to as low a point as is possible.

There are other provisions in this bill, one of which has already been discussed to a certain extent, that demand attention. The one already discussed refers to the employment of persons in the navy-yards. Why, sir, what is revealed by the investigations in the other House? That men are employed and placed in the navy-yards for political purposes is unquestionable. If you turn to the month of November, in the year 1874, you will find that more than a thousand men were dismissed from the construction department of that service who had, I assert, not from general rumor, but from facts deducible from the investigations made in the other House, been taken in temporarily in order that their votes might be controlled at the election. I have before me the report of the investigation, and I find from a statement that the total discharges in the month of November, 1874, were 1,059 men. There were 178 shipwrights discharged, and 67 borers, and so on; the whole list is given; 489 laborers were discharged. And this only covers the employés of one Bureau of the Navy Department, the Bureau of Construction and Repair. Why were these men discharged in the month of November? An examination of the report which I hold in my hand will show that in the month of October and in the month of September the force in the yards was very largely increased; and yet when November came around this large number was dismissed and sent away. What was that for? The legitimate inference is that it was done for political purposes, to give employment to men in the navy-yards so that their votes might be controlled in the election. Unfortunately many of these men are poor; they have families dependent upon them; and, while they may be independent in their spirits, yet their circumstances are such that they are not at liberty to be independent in their action when those that give them employment demand that they shall vote in a particular way. What were those men discharged for? Here were 1,059 men discharged in the month of November. The fair inference, from the fact that these employés were increased in the months of September and October and discharged immediately after the election, is that employment was given them in order that they might be serviceable at the election. What did that cost the Government? I find in this report the testimony of Commodore Nichols. The following question was put to him by Mr. MILLS, of Texas:

I called the other day for a report of the amount of money expended in the construction department during the months of September, October, and November, 1874, exclusive of your permanent force. Can you furnish that report now?

He answered:

As per memorandum furnished from the construction department, I find that $40,631.11 was expended in the month of September; in October, $49,642.69; in November, $23,504.40.

Here was a falling off not only of a thousand men, but more than half of the expenditure for the month of October or the month of September was also reduced. Now am I not at liberty to inquire why was that done? Am I not at liberty to infer that the increase was made for a political purpose, and when that purpose was accomplished these men were discharged? The prosecution of political objects has thus cost this Government a large amount of money.

But that is not the only proof. There is more direct proof still. Here is a letter I find contained in this report as to the Boston navy-yard, directed to the commodore:

Private.] BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS, October 23, 1874.

MY DEAR COMMODORE: I wish you would approve requisitions for men to be employed as they may be made until the 1st of November.

Some fifty additional men has allowed from the Chelsea district, and I suppose some more will be required from Gooch's district.

The Administration desire the success of Gooch and FROST.

Yours, respectfully,

I. HANSCOM.

Commodore E. T. NICHOLS, U. S. N.,
Commandant.

There is the direct testimony that employment was given to men to gratify the wishes of the Executive of the country. There is the testimony, direct and positive and conclusive, that the public service has been used for political purposes and to advance the wishes of the Administration, and yet when these bills come in and we propose a reduction there is astonishment!

Mr. DAWES. Would it interrupt the Senator if I were to make an inquiry?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Not at all, for I have no set speech to make.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator were familiar with the laws of Massachusetts I think he would find some difficulty in discovering what benefit would result politically to anybody in Massachusetts by the employment of men in that yard at that time. No man can vote in Charlestown, where that yard is situated, unless he has resided in the State a year, and has resided in the town of Charlestown six months, and has paid a tax assessed upon him within two years. Any employment of men in that yard during the summer of any year previous to an election, after the first day of May, will not help anybody politically. No man can vote in Charlestown, the single objection of anybody in the world will stop his voting, unless he is able to prove seven days before he goes to the poll that he has been a resident of the State for a whole year and of the town of Charlestown for a period of six months; and this he has got to do seven days before the day of election. If the Senator will show us how employment during the month of October or November in the Charlestown Navy Yard will enable any one party to poll more votes in that district, he will do what nobody in Massachusetts who is familiar with the laws of Massachusetts and the way they are administered has been able as yet to discover.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am very much indebted to the Senator from Massachusetts for the information, and am very happy to inform him that I am somewhat acquainted with the requirements of the election laws of Massachusetts. I believe her statutes now on her books provide that nobody can vote unless he can read a certain amount of the Constitution or of the Bible. I am not entirely ignorant of the requirements of the statute-laws of Massachusetts in reference to the qualifications of electors, and I suppose that some qualifications of residence may be required. But how easy it is to put upon the pay-rolls of the navy-yard men whose residence is not changed or men who may have been transferred from one district to another, who may have changed their residence, and reward them as partisans. I do not know that that was done, and I will not say that it was done; but I do say that the fact appears—appears positively and affirmatively by this letter directed to the commodore by Mr. Hanscom—that the President desired the election of Gooch and FROST, and that it might become necessary to add to the voters of the district.

Mr. DAWES. I am quite aware that Mr. Hanscom said two things: first, that it might be necessary to employ certain men in that district and, second, that the President desired the election of those gentlemen; but, while those two things are in that letter, they hardly justify the Senator in saying that here is proof positive of an attempt to put men in that navy-yard for the purpose of getting more votes polled at Charlestown than they would be entitled to have, for, as I said, (and the Senator has been unable to show in what way it can be done,) no man can be taken from one town in Massachusetts and put into another after the 1st day of May and succeed in putting in his vote there. It cannot be done. The process is too cumbersome, there are too many difficulties in the way, and it is too easy of detection.

A committee of the House of Representatives—if I may be permitted to allude to their proceedings—have been upon that navy-yard, the Committee of Elections of the House of Representatives; and what have they found? Not that a single one of those men cast a vote there for the sitting member, but simply that the sitting member recommended that a certain number of men might be employed in that yard; that is all. And they have come to the conclusion that that disfranchises the man who happens to have carried in his pocket such a recommendation, so that he is not a voter!

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts what this request was made for if it was not for political purposes; what other object could there have been, especially when you connect it with the fact that the wishes of the President are urged in a letter in that behalf?

Mr. DAWES. I do not see anything in the letter indicating that those men were to be employed for political purposes. If any such thing was attempted, it was attempted by a man who did not know the laws of Massachusetts and by a man who knew less of the temper and spirit of the voters of Massachusetts, for it turned out that all the men of the yard voted against Mr. Gooch. The action of the very men that were recommended by him and by Mr. FROST for employment in that yard shows that the recommendation was not for political purposes. No man in Massachusetts attempts to lead the voter by any such scheme or by any such promise as that. Four to one of all the employés of the navy-yard in Charlestown, Massachusetts, voted against the Administration at that very election.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I honor Massachusetts if that is the spirit and sentiment of the people of Massachusetts; that they will not suffer any corruption of voters or any improper influences to be exercised over them; but that does not satisfy me that the attempt was not made; and the Senator from Massachusetts has not explained what were the purport and meaning and intent of this letter; whether the object contemplated was not to influence the election in those districts when Mr. Hanscom penned that letter to the commodore, and whether the employment of the men was not for that purpose. It may be that after those men came into the yard they exercised the privileges of freemen, and were not the dumb slaves of the superintendents of those yards, but voted according to the dictates of their own judgment; but that does not relieve the intent, the object, and the purpose for which the employment was given and for which this request was made.

Mr. DAWES. I venture to say to the Senator from Delaware that there is not a scintilla of proof and there is no fact that bears him out in the statement that a man cast a vote in Charlestown who was not entitled to cast his vote there in Charlestown, whether he was employed in the navy-yard or whether he was employed anywhere else.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That may be all true. I do not say that any person voted illegally in Boston or Charlestown, or any part of Massachusetts. That is not the point. My point is that the employés of these navy-yards were increased for the purpose and object of influencing their votes; and whether it had that effect or not is not the question.

Mr. DAWES. I understand the Senator's point to be that, and that led me to make the inquiry what evidence he had to sustain him.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have the evidence before me that the employés were largely increased in the months of September and October, and that many were dismissed immediately after the election—more than a thousand of them—and that the cost to the country of this poceeding was more than $100,000.

Mr. DAWES. Has the Senator any other evidence than that? If the Senator has any other evidence than that, I should like to hear it; but, unless he says he has, I take it that the only evidence he has is that it did so happen in the business of the navy-yard during the year that there were more men employed during the months of September and October than there were in any other months of the year; but it did so also happen—and the Senator has failed to take notice of that fact—that it could not serve anybody in Massachusetts, and, therefore, nobody in Massachusetts, for political purposes, desired any such proceeding as that; and nobody in Massachusetts could have any such proceeding forced upon him from here in ignorance of the law of Massachusetts and of the fact that it could not avail anything.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I had not expected, when I commenced the remarks which I am making, to detain the Senate half this time. I am glad, however, that I have furnished the opportunity to the Senator from Massachusetts to disclaim all iniquitous practices in reference to elections on the part of the people of his State. I bring no charge against them that the citizens of Massachusetts are politically dishonest. That was not my point. My point was that the public money of this country was being expended in the navy-yards of this country for political purposes, and that this had been attempted in the Charlestown navy-yard, and I produced authority here from which it is legitimate to infer that the attempt was a very large one indeed. When I find that a thousand men as soon as the elections were over were discharged from the navy-yard, I have a right to infer that their employment in the navy-yard up to that time was for the purpose of controlling and influencing the elections in that neighborhood. And it is not only true of that yard, but I have been credibly informed that it is true of almost all the navy-yards in this country. I know that a very responsible gentleman who has much business with the navy-yard in Philadelphia informed me some time ago that he had gone to that yard just before an election and found it full. I think he stated at one time that it carried on its rolls twenty-seven hundred men; and he told me that a number of those men—he watched their operations—were simply employed in taking the bark off the edges of oak timber with something like a case-knife or an instrument very similar to a case-knife, and that those men were kept until after the election, and when he went there a second time a large portion of them had been dismissed from the service.

I am not expressing this opinion entirely from inferences either, because I find before me remarks delivered in the House of Representatives by a gentleman familiar with this subject, who is on the Naval Committee in the other House, and who expressed himself in very decided terms. I read from a speech of Mr. MILLS:

Now, sir, about one thousand hands were employed under that order to cut down the hull of the steamship Virginia—

The order which I have alluded to—an old vessel commenced in 1816, and that has the most magnificent hull of live-oak timber of the very best quality in the United States Navy, officers of the Navy say as sound and hard as rock, and the work done cost the Government I suppose eight or ten thousand dollars in the injury to the vessel, but the expenses to the Treasury for the payment of hands amounted to over $100,000. One hundred thousand dollars of the treasure of the Government of the United States, if you will allow me to discard poetry and speak in the language of truth and fact, was embezzled by the officers of the Government to elect two gentlemen to Congress who were agreeable to the taste of the Administration; and I will say in praise of the gentleman from Massachusetts that all the energies of the Administration, all the sinews of its power in that yard, all the influence of $100,000 that was robbed from the Treasury to defeat him by putting men in the yard who would vote against him—notwithstanding all this, when the day of election came, so strong is his hold on the affections of the people of Massachusetts that these men went to the polls to a man and cast their votes for him.

Mr. BANKS. I cannot dispute it, sir.

The Administration desired the election of Gooch and FROST, but Mr. BANKS was returned by the honest men who found employment in the navy-yard at Charlestown.

Mr. DAWES. From whose speech did the Senator read?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. MILLS'S, one of the members of the committee in the other House.

Mr. DAWES. Does he say that public money was embezzled for the purpose stated?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I read his language precisely.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator do me the favor to read it again?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes, sir.

One hundred thousand dollars of the treasure of the Government of the United States, if you will allow me to discard poetry and speak in the language of truth and fact, was embezzled by the officers of the Government to elect two gentlemen to Congress who were agreeable to the taste of the Administration.

Mr. DAWES. Now, Mr. President, at some time——

Mr. SAULSBURY. And Mr. BANKS said he could not deny it.

Mr. DAWES. That is not what Mr. BANKS said. It was charged that those voters voted for Mr. BANKS, and not for this gentleman, and that is what Mr. BANKS said he did not deny.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That may have been his meaning. I supposed, however, it was an indorsement of all that was said. He did not deny that part; that is very certain.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I am sorry to interrupt my good friend from Delaware.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I always yield with pleasure to my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I did not feel any interest in this contest when it was between Delaware and Massachusetts; but when Pennsylvania is alluded to I do feel a little interest, and I have risen only to say that if anything wrong was done at the navy-yard at Philadelphia within a few years it was in putting democrats in the yard. I am sure that a majority of all the people employed there last year and the year before, probably in other years, but certainly in those two years, were placed there by a democratic Congressman, and I think upon one or two occasions they were put in there to help some of my personal friends in Delaware; not political friends, of course; I would not allude to it if it were; but Delaware has had her good share of all the pickings about the navy-yard in Philadelphia. [Laughter.] A long while ago a very distinguished man, a Senator from the State of Delaware, had a law passed—I think it will be found somewhere on the books—requiring that oak timber should be taken from the forests of Delaware; and I am sure that at least three-fourths of all the oak timber consumed at the navy-yard in Philadelphia for the last ten, fifteen, or twenty years has come from those beautiful forests in the State of Delaware. Those grand old oak trees, which in the time of the Revolution shaded and covered the patriots of those days, have been cut down to take care of the democratic candidates for office in that good State of Delaware. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I anticipated when I referred to the navy-yard in Philadelphia that the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania would come to the rescue. I have no question that he states truly that many of the employés in that navy-yard have been democrats. Ah, sir, that has been too often, unfortunately, the policy of our republican friends; when they found a man poor in property, who needed employment, who had a wife and children to support, and who was dependent upon his daily toil for his subsistence, they would capture him by giving him employment and then read to him the higher law, "Vote the ticket or go out." Unfortunately that has been too often the case, and then, when my friend from Pennsylvania invited democrats so lovingly into the navy-yard in Philadephia, the invitation was not because of any high regard for the humble poor man who desired employment, but in order that he might be constrained to vote the republican ticket. That has been the policy which has been pursued too often in that navy-yard. I am happy to inform my friend that, while Delaware has contributed something and did during the war to the materials which went into your vessels, yet she never charged anything but reasonable and fair prices. Her contractors were always the lowest bidders and never got a contract through favoritism, as has been the case in some other sections of the country.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware a question, with his permission.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Senator if the democrats of Delaware would vote the republican ticket merely because they were employed?

Mr. SAULSBURY. My friend from Illinois has been asleep. They did not employ Delaware democrats in that navy-yard. They left a very fair number at home.

Mr. LOGAN. Any sort of democrats. Does the Senator think they could be induced to vote the republican ticket by such employment?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes, sir. The Senator from Illinois knows as well as I do that when a man has a wife and children dependent on him, and when they are actually starving for bread, he will too often forego his independence. I am sorry it is so. I am sorry any man in this country is in such pecuniary circumstances that he has to surrender his independence as a freeman. I am sorry that every man is not at liberty to vote his own sentiments without fear, favor, reward or the hope thereof; but I know that too frequently men in authority, men who have employment to give, do give it with reference to the influence which they may exert over the unfortunate man whose means are very short and whose family is dependent upon him. Why, sir, it is notorious; it cannot be laughed out of court; it cannot be ridiculed. The fact is, there is no doubt about it, in my mind, that the employment of these men just before the election was for political purposes. I am glad that I see the chairman of the Naval Committee of this body giving me his attention. I hope he will investigate this matter and apply the proper remedy to correct it in the future.

Mr. President, I have said all that I care to say on this subject. I am fully satisfied, in the first place, that the expenditures in the Naval Department have been greater than were necessary. I am satisfied that much of the money has been improperly expended; or otherwise, for the vast amount of money that has been expended for the Navy, we should have a better navy to-day. We have as good seamen, we have as brave officers, we have as noble men upon our decks to-day as ever trod the decks of American vessels or any other vessels; but unfortunately their vessels are many of them inferior, as the report of the Secretary a few years ago told us in strains almost as doleful as those of Milton in Paradise Lost. He told you of the deplorable condition of your Navy, and that, too, after there had been an expenditure of $500,000,000 since the democrats went out of power, and more than $150,000,000 since the present Administration came into power. There is something wrong; "something is rotton in the state of Denmark." I will join with my friends on the other side in helping to build up an efficient navy; one that will do honor to the country, that will protect the rights of American commerce and American citizens everywhere; but I demand of those gentlemen having charge of these affairs and having the majority to rule them, that they shall economize wherever they can, and that they shall heed the voice of the people which is coming up for relief against the burdens of taxation which are now oppressing them.

Mr. DAWES. I do not desire to detain the Senate any longer about the matter of the Charlestown navy-yard; but I may be allowed a few words from the fact that the charge has been repeatedly made that by some action of the Administration, through its patronage or the employment of men in Massachusetts, there was an attempt, which was carried out, to cause votes to be polled in and about the town of Charlestown, where the navy-yard is situated, by men who had no right to vote. And it is charged that very many hundred men were employed in the navy-yard at Charlestown two years ago, just before the election, for that purpose, and that after the election they were discharged. The reason why a large number were employed there in the months of September and October previous to that election has all been stated by those who employed them, in the very evidence before the Senator from Delaware, who has forgotten to read it. I attempted during his remarks to show him that if they were employed for any such purpose as he suggested, it was impossible for them to have carried out that purpose. I was in hopes before the Senator sat down that he would give the public the benefit of the statement of the very man who wrote the letter which he has read, how it was and for what purpose it was that he employed, during the months of September and October, in the Charlestown navy-yard this large force. But the Senator, following a member of the House, has taken the liberty to assert that because it happened in those months that many men were employed, and because after the election it also happened that a large proportion of those men were discharged, that was the purpose, that was the reason. Post hoc, propter hoc, is the logic of the Senator, without the support of one particle of evidence.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if there is any other inference to be drawn from the letter of Mr. Hanscom than that which I drew when he positively says that—

Some fifty additional men has allowed from the Chelsea district, and I suppose some more will be required from Gooch's district!

Is there any other inference, would it not be violence to the language to put any other inference on it than that they were wanted there for the purpose of voting the republican ticket? I ask the Senator to deal candidly with that question.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator has put his construction on that letter without giving Mr. Hanscom the benefit of his own statement in reference to that letter.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The letter speaks for itself.

Mr. DAWES. The letter does speak for itself quite as much as the Senator attempts to speak for it, and the author of the letter speaks for it, too, quite as authoritatively, it seems to me, as the Senator. Who authorized the Senator to interpret the language of Mr. Hanscom in the face of what he says himself? Mr. Hanscom tells the Senator, and it is before him in the record, what employment it is necessary to have and what work it was necessary to perform in that yard during those months; and I have told the Senator—and the Senator has not shown one particle of evidence to the contrary of what I have stated—that if that had been the purpose of Mr. Hanscom it was futile and vain. There has never been produced one particle of evidence anywhere, it does not exist, because the fact does not exist, that any men were put in the Charlestown navy-yard during those months or any other months to vote in Charlestown or vote in any other town in Massachusetts who were not authorized by the laws of Massachusetts to vote in the town where they cast their ballots. So far as their being put in there for the purpose of helping this or that man friendly to the Administration is concerned, the result shows that the influence of those very men in seeking for the appointment of their fellow-citizens around the Charlestown navy-yard was not a political influence or actuated by political considerations. It was their desire to give employment to very many industrious men roundabout Charlestown who were seeking employment and seeking it through every avenue and through every influence, and seeking it of the Government there as they seek it here, as they flock to this city and as they crowd the rooms of members of Congress and of Senators. I think the Senator himself has told me that, strange to say, people seem to think he has some influence sometimes to obtain employment for honest and deserving men. I have no doubt that if he has such influence it is a great pleasure to him to exert it; and it would not be fair for me to say that he makes a condition of exerting his influence in that behalf that the recipient of that benefit shall henceforth devote himself to his political advancement.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me a moment? Did I understand him to say that I had boasted that I had some influence with this Administration or any other Administration?

Mr. DAWES. Why, Mr. President, I have not said the Senator boasted of any such thing. I have said that it seemed to me I had heard the Senator admit that persons, following the vain idea that seems to possess people all over this land that they have but to turn their faces Governmentward in these times of distress and they can find employment here, seek it through all the avenues possible, and through all the members and Senators they can reach, and through officials here. I know they approach democrats, and I know they can find no more kind-hearted or generous or liberal one than the Senator from Delaware, and I know the Senator from Delaware too well to believe that he would make it a condition-precedent that they should abjure their political faith and join themselves to his party and serve him before he would give them his influence.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask the Senator a question, because I do not see the relevancy of his remarks entirely. I now want to ask him what is meant by the "Chelsea district" and what is meant by "Gooch's district?" Does that mean the navy-yard? I want to know whether those terms refer to election districts. The Senator has the information and I should be glad if he would furnish me with it.

Mr. DAWES. There was a necessity, Mr. Hanscom says, for taking care of the timber in that yard. I have no doubt that in employing the men——

Mr. SAULSBURY. He speaks of certain districts, not of the yard.

Mr. DAWES. Will my friend let me get through? I have no doubt that in employing those men to work in that yard it was the disposition of Mr. Hanscom to distribute them among those different districts, to make his selections from the different districts and not take them all from one point, so that the benefit of the employment might be general throughout that whole section of country. That is what I suppose he meant by it; and I persist in the assertion, and shall until I get some answer from the Senator from Delaware, or until he ceases to charge an attempt upon anybody to undertake to stuff fraudulent votes in the ballot-boxes of Massachusetts, that he shall explain the mode by which it is possible for it to be done.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not mean to be put on the defensive. I have been propounding questions to my friend, but he is adroitly seeking to make a witness out of me. I want him to explain this letter of Mr. Hanscom; I want him to explain what it means, if it does not mean that these men were to be employed for political purposes. Explain that, and I shall be satisfied; and if he answers it to my satisfaction I will then say that I have put a misconstruction on the letter; but, according to my reading of this plain language, it means that and nothing else, that there was employment to be given for political considerations to men in the navy-yard at Charlestown. I do not say that they were influenced by it to vote; I mean to say that that was the object, if I can judge the purport and meaning of a letter so plain as this.

Mr. DAWES. I know the Senator does not say so any more than the man spoke of the quality of his sausages on a celebrated occasion. But I have to repeat that Mr. Hanscom has himself given a fair and honest and full explanation of all he did and all he said there, and that is before the Senator; and the Senator has failed, in making his exposition of the course of Mr. Hanscom, to give him the benefit of what he has said himself.

I have also asked the Senator from Delaware repeatedly, and he has failed to respond, to show me, before I explain that letter, how it is possible that it could have the construction which he puts upon it, in the face of the answer which I give him, that the law itself is in his way and that it could not have that effect. It not only did not have that effect, but the gentleman who received the benefit of that political influence, such as it was, was opposed to the Administration and opposed to the very men whose names are mentioned in that letter.

I beg pardon of the Senate for occupying so much time about this matter, but I did think that some time might occur when this charge floating all around over the country would be made by some Senator or somebody in a place where I should like to ask him to explain the process by which it could be done. I have done that now. I have failed to receive an answer. I do hope the Senator from Delaware will study it well and get up some answer before he repeats that charge again.

Mr. CRAGIN. Mr. President——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will my honorable friend permit me to make a statement? It is desirable that there should be an executive session for a few minutes to confirm some one or two nominations that are pressing. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations asked me to make this request of the Senate. As we are about taking a vote, and the yeas and nays are demanded, it occurred to me that there was a possibility that there might not be found a quorum; and therefore I suggest now that at any time it is agreeable to the Senate I should like to have them go into executive session for a purpose which will only occupy a minute or two. It is to make some confirmations that it is requisite should be made to-day.

Mr. SARGENT. I suggest to the Senator that he make his motion now. It will be better perhaps than to make it later. After my friend from New Hampshire has spoken, as he has already claimed the floor, I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to apply the five-minute rule to this bill. We have had very general debate on both sides of the House. Massachusetts and Delaware have shaken hands, and none of the rest of us want to enter into any particular fight over what is left of the bill. I shall therefore, at a convenient time, ask to apply the five-minute rule.

Mr. CRAGIN. I shall not consume five minutes. There are many things that I should like to say, but I will confine myself within that time.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well. Then, with the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I move that the five-minute rule be now applied to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After six minutes spent in executive session, the doors were re-opened.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3375) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to increase the appropriation for equipment of vessels, in lines 188 and 189, from $970,000 to $1,250,000.

Mr. CRAGIN. Mr. President, I should like to say a good deal upon this subject, but time is so precious and it is so important that we progress with the business before us that I will not venture to occupy the time of the Senate more than a few moments.

The Senator from Delaware has referred to the employment of men in the navy-yards prior to elections. This is no new subject to me. I have heard and thought much upon it ever since I have had a seat in the Senate, and I have often thought that there were some abuses practiced under that idea; but I have discovered that it is no new thing. It is not a matter that is confined to republican administration at all, but it goes far back. I have heard, I believe, that Mr. Van Buren, when he was President, ordered three vessels from Norfolk, where everything was safe for the democratic party, to be taken to the Brooklyn yard and there repaired, that being a locality where it was deemed necessary to increase the democratic vote. I hold in my hand a report made by a committee of the House of Representatives in 1860, signed by R. Hatton, Samuel Steel Blair, and JOHN SHERMAN, upon this very subject, and I find in this report facts as remarkable as any that have been presented here by the Senator from Delaware, and I wish especially to call his attention to the facts contained in this report.

In May, 1858—James Buchanan was then President of the United States—in the New York yard there were thirteen hundred and
